Statement from NYC Comptroller Stringer on the launch of the NYC Pension Funds' "Vote No" Campaign Against a Director at NRG Energy

(New York, NY) — Today, New York City Comptroller Scott M. Stringer and the New York City Pension Funds announced the launch of a "VOTE NO" campaign urging NRG Energy shareowners to vote AGAINST Barry Smitherman, one of the company's director nominees, at its April 27th annual meeting. Comptroller Stringer and the NYC Pension Funds believe both the deeply flawed process that allowed short-term activist investors to appoint Mr. Smitherman to the board and his history of climate change denial disqualify him from serving on NRG's board. In a letter filed with the SEC and sent to shareowners, Comptroller Stringer outlines how these concerns could undermine NRG's ability to maximize long-term value for its shareowners.

"Barry Smitherman's view that climate change is a hoax disqualifies him from serving as a director at NRG. In recent years, this company has positioned itself to maximize long-term shareowner value by reducing its greenhouse gas emissions and embracing a low carbon future — but Mr. Smitherman's influence could undermine that plan. His anti-science claims are both counterproductive in NRG's boardroom and send a demoralizing message to the company's employees," New York City Comptroller Scott M. Stringer said. "NRG's shareowners should be alarmed by Mr. Smitherman's placement on the board. It's a symptom of a deeply flawed process that has handed undue influence to directors backed by well-known short-term investors. Those who want a quick pay day are now on a collision course with the long-term interests of NRG. That's unacceptable — and that's why we are urging NRG shareowners to vote against Mr. Smitherman's election."
