Revenue Recognition, page F-16

1. We refer to your accounting policy for the sale of handsets. We also note the disclosure of the introduction of a new handset sales scheme which enables subscribers to select installment payments. Please tell us about the terms of your arrangements with resellers and subscribers. In your response, please also provide us with the following information:
  - Describe any right of return provision available to the resellers and when they are obligated to pay you for the handset;
  - If there is a right of return, discuss your historical experience with returns;
  - Describe the payment process between the company and resellers once phones are sold on the payment plan to subscribers, specifically indicating how you pay the resellers;
  - Describe any recourse you have if a subscriber returns a phone or defaults on payments under the installment plan;
  - Tell us the accounting literature that you rely upon to record revenue from handset sales at the time of delivery to agent resellers and how you evaluated the impact of the installment payment plan available to subscribers on your revenue recognition. In your response please also tell us how you considered the guidance in question two of SAB Topic 13.A.1, and 605-45 of the FASB Accounting Standards Codification;
  - It appears that the sale of handsets and the related subscriber financing may constitute a multiple element arrangement. Tell us how you applied the guidance in 605-25 of the FASB Accounting Standards Codification in evaluating these arrangements.
