DESCRIPTION OF THE BUSINESS & BUSINESS PLAN

Our company focuses on providing rapid, on-site diagnostic solutions for the detection of foodborne pathogens, such as Listeria, E. coli, and Salmonella, catering specifically to food processing industries. Our innovative system is meticulously designed to meet or surpass all benchmarks required to replace traditional laboratory testing methods. Furthermore, our state-of-the-art technology is also capable of delivering accurate quantitative RNA/DNA analysis, offering additional benefits to the food safety sector.

The effectiveness and efficiency of our system have been independently validated by third-party organizations within the industry. This validation demonstrates the system's credibility and reliability in addressing food safety concerns.

Our business plan is centered around revolutionizing the food safety landscape by offering faster, more efficient, and highly accurate diagnostic solutions that can be easily integrated into existing food processing workflows. By doing so, we aim to reduce the risk of foodborne illnesses and improve public health. In the long term, we plan to expand our reach by collaborating with more key players in the global food industry, continually refining our technology to cater to the evolving needs of the market and exploring new opportunities for growth in related sectors.

The Company's Products and/or Services

Product / Service	Description	Current Market
TrueRapid Listeria	Rapid detection of the foodborne pathogen Listeria in environmental samples taken from food production facilities.	B2B Market; Food production & Food Processors

Competition and Industry Landscape

While there have been multiple attempts to develop rapid pathogen detection systems capable of delivering results within an hour or less for the food processing industry, as far as we are aware, none before SnapDNA have successfully addressed all of the specific, non-negotiable industry requirements to replace lab tests. These requirements include detecting only live cells, working with industry-accepted sample sizes and collection methods, and providing near-zero false positive results. Although other companies such as Neogen and Clear Labs have targeted pathogen detection in the food industry, we don't believe competitors have met the requirements for widespread adoption by the industry.

Customer Base and Market Opportunity

Our target market is primarily B2B, with a focus on selling our products directly to food processors and independent food test labs who provide pathogen testing services to food processors. Our products are designed to cater to the entire food production industry. Marketing reports estimate that, in the US, 48% of all tests represent finished food product testing, while 8% of all tests represent raw material testing. All US food processors are mandated to conduct pathogen testing as part of their USDA/FDA-required HACCP (Hazard Analysis at Critical Control Points) plan. The percentages are estimates and should not be relied upon for accuracy and may be out of date.

Supply Chain Management

We source our materials from a diverse range of suppliers whenever possible to reduce the dependency on any single source. Our thorough research into our supply chain has prepared us for potential shortages or necessary changes should any provider become unavailable.

Anticipated Business Plan and Revenue Model

SnapDNA's business model revolves around selling single-use cartridges for each food pathogen test performed, with prices set to be competitive with traditional lab testing. The company intends to provide analysis systems, recouping this cost through a surcharge added to cartridge pricing in the first year of contract pricing. The company intends to also sell reagents and other consumables required for use with the SnapDNA system.

EMPLOYEES

The Company currently has 4 employees.

RISK FACTORS

The securities issued in our offering (the “Securities”) continue to involve a high degree of risk and may result in the loss of your entire investment. In addition to the risks specified below, the Company is subject to same risks that all companies in its business, and all companies in the economy, are exposed to. These include risks related to economic downturns, political and economic events, and technological developments (such as hacking and the ability to prevent hacking). Furthermore, early-stage companies inherently pose greater risks than more established companies. As an existing investor, you should be aware of these ongoing risks and consider consulting with your legal, tax, and financial advisors to evaluate your continued investment in the Securities. The Securities should be held by those who can afford to lose their entire investment. The following risk factors are addressed to existing investors but apply equally to any investor who may acquire the Securities.

Risks Related to the Company's Business and Industry

We have a limited operating history, which makes evaluating our performance challenging. Consequently, our prospects must be considered in light of the risks that any new company encounters. The Company is still working on implementing its business plan, and there is no guarantee of success. We cannot assure that we will ever operate profitably or maintain consistent profits if achieved. Although many companies successfully return capital to investors without achieving substantial profits, there is no guarantee that such an exit will occur or be available to the Company. The likelihood of our success should be considered in light of the problems, expenses, difficulties, complications, and delays typically encountered by non-mature companies. The Company may not be successful in attaining the objectives necessary to overcome these risks and uncertainties.

We may face potential difficulties in obtaining capital. We may have difficulty raising needed capital in the future as a result of, among other factors, our lack of revenues from sales, as well as the inherent business risks associated with our Company and present and future market conditions. We will likely require additional funds to execute our business strategy and conduct our operations. If adequate funds are unavailable, we may be required to delay, reduce the scope of or eliminate one or more of our research, development, or commercialization programs, product launches, or marketing efforts, any of which may materially harm our business, financial condition, and results of operations. As an existing investor, you should be aware of the ongoing risk associated with our potential difficulties in obtaining capital.

The investment you have made involves continued risks, including the possibility of implementing new lines of business or offering new products and services within existing lines of business. As our business model is subject to significant risk and may not be thoroughly tested in the market, we might need to modify or completely change our business model. Failure to foresee market changes and reactions could adversely impact our business. Developing and marketing new lines of business and/or new products and services may require significant time and resources, and there are substantial risks and uncertainties associated with these efforts, particularly in instances where markets are not fully developed. We may not be successful in introducing new products and services in response to industry trends or developments in technology, or those new products may not achieve market acceptance. Consequently, we could lose business, be forced to price products and services on less advantageous terms to retain or attract clients, or be subject to cost increases. As a result, our business, financial condition, or results of operations may be adversely affected.

Our reliance on other companies to provide components and services for our products also poses risks. Our ability to meet our obligations to customers may be adversely affected if suppliers or contractors fail to provide agreed-upon supplies or services in a timely, cost-effective manner and in compliance with customer requirements. The quality of our products may be adversely impacted if companies to whom we delegate manufacturing or from whom we acquire items do not provide components that meet required specifications and perform to our and our customers' expectations. The risk of these adverse effects may be greater if we rely on only one or two contractors or suppliers for a particular component. Supply of components for new or existing products could be delayed or constrained, which could adversely affect our business and results of operations.

We also rely on various intellectual property rights, including trademarks, to operate our business. These intellectual property rights may not be sufficiently broad or provide us a significant competitive advantage. The steps we have taken to maintain and protect our intellectual property may not prevent it from being challenged, invalidated, circumvented, or designed around, particularly in countries where intellectual property rights are not highly developed or protected. Our failure to obtain or maintain intellectual property rights that convey competitive advantage or adequately protect our intellectual property could adversely impact our competitive position and results of operations. We also rely on nondisclosure and noncompetition agreements with employees, consultants, and other parties to protect our trade secrets and other proprietary rights. However, there is no guarantee that these agreements will adequately protect our trade secrets and other proprietary rights or that third parties will not independently develop substantially equivalent proprietary information. As we expand our business, protecting our intellectual property will become increasingly important, and the protective steps we have taken may be inadequate to deter competitors from using our proprietary information. Consequently, our competitive position and results of operations could be negatively affected.

The success of the Company is highly dependent on the experience and expertise of its board of directors, executive officers, and key employees. The individuals who occupy these positions play a crucial role in guiding and executing the Company's strategic vision and goals.

The Company's reliance on key personnel comes without any key person life insurance policies. While our operations and business plan execution depend on certain key individuals, we have not procured any insurance policies for these individuals in case of death or disability. As a result, should any of these key personnel pass away or become disabled, the Company will not receive any compensation to mitigate their absence. The loss of such individuals could negatively affect the Company and our operations. Since many states do not enforce non-competition agreements, we cannot guarantee that key personnel will remain with the Company. Thus, obtaining key man insurance does not entirely eliminate the risk associated with relying on key personnel.

Our reputation and brand quality are crucial to our business and success in both existing and new markets. Any incident that diminishes consumer loyalty towards our brand could significantly damage its value and our business. Negative publicity, regardless of accuracy, may adversely affect us. The rise of social media platforms and other internet-based communication channels, such as blogs and social media websites, enable individuals to reach a broad audience of consumers and other interested parties almost instantaneously. Adverse or inaccurate information posted on these platforms may harm our performance, prospects, or business, often with little opportunity for redress or correction.

Our business is vulnerable to cyber security threats, attacks, and other disruptions. We continually face advanced and persistent assaults on our information infrastructure, where we manage and store various proprietary information and sensitive/confidential data related to our operations. These attacks may include sophisticated malware and phishing emails designed to exploit our products or any security vulnerabilities. Some intrusions may involve zero-day malware, which is challenging to detect due to its absence from the signature set of commercially available antivirus scanning programs. Skilled computer programmers and hackers could potentially breach our network security, compromise or misappropriate our confidential information or that of our customers or third parties, disrupt systems, or cause shutdowns. Moreover, complex software and applications that we produce or obtain from third parties may contain design or manufacturing defects, including "bugs" and other issues that could unexpectedly interfere with our information infrastructure's operation. Disruptions, infiltrations, or failures of our information infrastructure systems or data centers due to software or hardware malfunctions, computer viruses, cyber-attacks, employee theft or misuse, power disruptions, natural disasters, or accidents may result in data security breaches, loss of critical data, and performance delays, adversely affecting our business.

Confidential customer information security breaches, especially those related to electronic processing of credit and debit card transactions, or breaches involving confidential employee information, could negatively impact our business. Our business necessitates the collection, transmission, and retention of personally identifiable information in our information technology systems and those maintained by third parties contracted to provide services. Ensuring data integrity and protection is of utmost importance. Governmental regulation on information security and privacy is becoming increasingly stringent, and our systems may struggle to meet these evolving requirements and expectations, possibly requiring significant additional investments or time. A breach in our information technology systems' security, or that of our service providers, could lead to operational inefficiencies, loss of profits, and an interruption in system operations. Moreover, considerable theft, loss, misappropriation, or unauthorized access to customers' or proprietary data could result in fines, legal claims, or proceedings.

The use of individually identifiable data by our business, our associates, and third parties is regulated at state, federal, and international levels. Individual data regulation is rapidly and unpredictably changing. Regulatory changes could adversely impact our business, possibly rendering our business model unviable. Information security-related costs, such as investments in technology, consumer protection law compliance costs, and expenses resulting from consumer fraud, could materially affect our business and operational results. Our online operations' success depends on securely transmitting confidential information over public networks, including cashless payments. Employees, associates, or third parties' intentional or negligent actions could undermine our security measures, allowing unauthorized parties to access our data systems and misappropriate confidential data. There is no guarantee that advancements in computer capabilities, cryptography, or other developments will prevent the compromise of our customer transaction processing capabilities and personal data. If our data security or that of our associates or third parties is compromised, it could significantly harm our reputation, financial condition, and operating results. Compromised data security may also substantially increase our costs to safeguard against breaches and expose us to additional legal risks.

As a private company, we are not subject to Sarbanes-Oxley regulations and may lack the financial controls and procedures of public companies. We might not have an internal control infrastructure that meets public company standards, including Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 requirements. As a development-stage, non-public company, our financial and disclosure controls and procedures reflect this status. There is no guarantee that our financial and disclosure controls and procedures do not contain significant deficiencies or material weaknesses. Compliance with such financial and disclosure controls and procedures, if necessary, could be costly and materially adversely affect our operational results.

Our operations are subject to a highly regulated environment, and violations of federal, state, or local laws or regulations could adversely affect our business. We are subject to various laws and regulations, including local licensing requirements, retail financing, debt collection, consumer protection, environmental, health and safety, creditor, wage-hour, anti-discrimination, whistleblower, and other employment practices laws and regulations. Violations of these or future requirements could result in administrative, civil, or criminal sanctions, including fines, cease and desist orders, or even revocation or suspension of our license to operate. Consequently, we have incurred and will continue to incur capital and operating expenditures and other costs to comply with these requirements and regulations.

Global crises, similar to COVID-19, can significantly affect our business operations and revenue projections. The World Health Organization declared a global emergency on January 30, 2020, regarding the outbreak and characterized it as a pandemic on March 11, 2020. The outbreak spread throughout Europe, the Middle East, Canada, and the United States, prompting companies and various international jurisdictions to impose restrictions such as quarantines, closures, cancellations, and travel restrictions. New waves or different variants of the virus could result in additional unforeseeable business disruptions. Additionally, the world or particular regions could experience pandemics related to other types of viruses, diseases, or similar, which could have substantial impacts on our business.

IN ADDITION TO THE RISKS LISTED ABOVE, RISKS AND UNCERTAINTIES NOT PRESENTLY KNOWN, OR WHICH WE CONSIDER IMMATERIAL AS OF THE DATE OF THIS FORM C-AR, MAY ALSO HAVE AN ADVERSE EFFECT ON OUR BUSINESS AND RESULT IN THE TOTAL LOSS OF YOUR INVESTMENT.
