VIETNAM'S BOOMING CRAFT BEER SCENE

By Kate Springer, Dan Tham, CNN Updated 3:33 AM ET, Wed July 5, 2017

(CNN)A night out drinking in Vietnam used to mean one thing: sipping Bia Hoi, a local draft beer with 3% alcohol content, from a tiny stool on the sidewalk.

But feather-light lagers aren't the only game in town anymore.

The country's craft beer scene is booming, having welcomed more than a dozen micro-breweries in the past two years.

Prehistoric yeast fuels a craft brew

By Alyssa Pereira

Around 45 million years ago, a leaf became ensconced in a small chunk of Burmese amber. It was a mundane enough event at the time, until the piece fell into the right hands.

Today, through the scientific maneuverings of two very dedicated molecular biologists and a rather adventurous East Bay brewer, microscopic bacteria within the amber are being crafted into — go figure — beer.

Dr. Raul Cano, a molecular biologist and retired Cal Poly San Luis Obispo professor, acquired the Eocene Epoch piece of amber in the early 1990s. He successfully extracted a yeast, and then managed to revive it from dormancy shortly thereafter. His achievement, however, was not met with universal applause. As supposedly the first person to pull off such a temporally irreverent feat, critics were naturally skeptical.

Another molecular biologist, Clint Lambert, was one such cen-
