The offered securities may be modified any time before the end of the campaign. The securities that management retains have access to these rights, and will retain decision making rights.

19. Are there any differences not reflected above between the securities being offered and each other class of security of the issuer? If so, please explain below:

20. How could the exercise of rights held by the principal shareholders identified in Question 6 above affect the purchasers of the securities being offered?

The officers of the company will retain decision, voting, and dividend rights. The company has full decision rights in the company without a sign-off from non-voting shareholders.

21. How are the securities being offered being valued? Include examples of methods for how such securities may be valued by the issuer in the future, including during subsequent corporate actions.

The securities are being valued at the issuers discretion.

22. What are the risks to purchasers of the securities relating to minority ownership in the issuer?

A minority owner will forfeit voting rights to the company, and the company will retain buyback rights after one year. As a minority shareholder without voting rights, you will rely upon the majority shareholders to make decisions that increase the value of your investment.

23. What are the risks to purchasers associated with corporate actions including:

- additional issuances of securities
- issuer repurchases of securities
- a sale of the issuer or of assets of the issuer or

- transactions with related parties?

Minority ownership requires one to hold onto the securities for at least 1 year. After that period, owners can sell their shares at a fair market value, but the company has buy back rights on these securities before they can be offered to another investor who must be an accredited investor.
