Texas A&M Ranks First Among Public U. S. Universities In New Global CEO Alma Mater Index
 Texas A&M University ranks first among all public universities in the United States in a new international survey citing the 100 higher education institutions that produced the most current chief executives of the world's largest companies.

The listings, first of its type, are titled the "Alma Mater Index: Global Executives" and published by London-based Times Higher Education.

While topping all public U.S. universities, Texas A&M placed 34th overall and 13th among U.S. institutions. U. S. representation is dominated by private universities, headed by Harvard and Stanford.
