The AI revolution is here

From large language models to autonomous vehicles to disease research, AI's impact on the world is moving at lightspeed. The invention of the internet may be the only recent comparable advancement. A recent PwC report predicts that AI will contribute more than $15 trillion to the global economy by 2030—more than the current output of China and India combined.¹

Access: Granted

A year ago, it would've been virtually impossible for you to invest in a venture fund focused on private, pre-IPO companies. Venture capital has been perhaps the world's most lucrative asset class while remaining completely off-limits for most investors.²

But as we've learned: technology changes everything it touches.

Fundrise's first-of-its-kind Innovation Fund, with an initial target offering of $1 billion, is engineered to serve all investors. This is the first time anyone has been able to invest directly in a growth equity venture fund.

A pattern of disruption

For more than a decade, Fundrise’s team of 300+ financial professionals and software engineers has been investing in private markets and leveraging technology to drive performance.

In the process, we became America’s largest direct-access alternative asset manager, investing in a portfolio worth more than $7 billion* and serving more than 2 million people.

The Fundrise Difference

Technical expertise Our decades of first-hand experience building and operating tech companies gives us a deep understanding of the daily challenges and trade-offs a growing company faces. With over 100 software engineers and product managers on staff, we have more software depth and expertise than most venture funds.	Extensive reach As the largest direct-to-investor alternative asset manager in the country, we offer portfolio companies in-app exposure to nearly 2 million people—many of whom work in technology. Not only can this potentially drive new customers, recruiting, brand recognition, and near-term revenue for our portfolio companies, it can also provide critical name recognition for when it’s time to IPO.	Patient and passive capital We’ve engineered our investment infrastructure to enable us to be the most patient and passive source of capital on the market, eliminating any incentive to meddle with a founder/CEO’s long-term vision for the sake of our own short-term image or profits.
