ANNOUNCEMENT

What's happening?

Over the last 18 months, our company has been happy to bring you the latest investments news. Today, we are the news! Taylor Hoffman would like to present: Avidus.

Why does it matter?

Avidus is an investment app that aims to democratize active investment management nationwide. Taylor Hoffman has brought its decades of investment expertise from managing over $325M in client assets, to the palm of your hand; accessible for all.

Why should average hard-working Americans be forced to settle for savings accounts, robo-advisors, index funds, and apps that focus on gamifying your investments? It's time to get serious about building your wealth and the life you have always wanted.

Centered in Richmond, Virginia, Avidus brings an approach that works for you. Avidus investment strategies put you, our investor community, at the forefront. You won't find Avidus strategies with Wall Street firms, because they're our own. By having direct ownership of curated investments, we believe we are providing investors the most efficient way to compound wealth in the market.

The takeaway:

Don't play with your money. Download Avidus today.

STOCK MARKET COMMENTARY

⊗ In-Focus This Week: Inflation. Consumers. Earnings. On the inflation front, Thursday's CPI report is expected to show a 7.3% reading (the highest since 1981). On Friday, investors will be getting an update on Consumer Sentiment. All week, earnings reports will continue to inject volatility into the market.

+ Dip-Buyers In Tech | Crypto Bounce: Slowly but surely, the technology sector is recovering from its 15% slump at the beginning of the year. It seems that investors are bidding up some riskier stocks as they see that economic recovery is well underway and Omicron fears are fading. Cryptocurrencies have also staged a solid comeback in recent weeks with Bitcoin up over 25%.

- Federal Reserve Is The Boogie Man: Today we are going to get fresh inflation data that can influence how fast the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates this year. In recent comments, Federal Reserve members reiterated that they are prepared to raise rates throughout the year.

Disney Earnings

What's happening?

Disney (\$DIS: 3.33%) posted blowout earnings, as the stock roars back into favor.

Why does this matter?

Disney beat analyst expectations in both earnings and revenue on Wednesday, and the stock is rallying between 6%-7% during the after-hours session. The firm reported $21.82B in revenue against the expected $20.91B. Additionally, EPS came in at an adjusted $1.06 against the $0.63 expectation.

Disney fired on all cylinders last quarter. Total Disney+ subscriptions outperformed expectations by 4.5M subscribers, and the firm's Parks and Experiences business unit doubled its year-over-year revenue numbers. The firm committed to diving deeper into streaming, as an announcement stating that the firm will be aggressively bidding for the rights to NFL Sunday Ticket came through.

The return of the firm's core Park and Experiences business should be key for investors to hear. Executives noted that a significant number of international travelers to domestic parks returned last quarter, and that the gains are expected to stick.

SEC Crackdown

What's happening?

SEC proposes cracking down on broad disclosure rules for private investment funds.

Why does this matter?

Regulators are considering expansive new requirements for private investment funds, which often operate with limited regulatory supervision. The new requirements would have private equity and hedge fund managers provide quarterly statements on fund performance, compensation, expenses, and fees. Private investment funds traditionally require less oversight than the mutual fund industry, because they primarily cater to wealthy clients and institutional investors.

As the private investment industry continues to grow at an exceptional pace, SEC chairmen Gary Gensler, would like to see more transparency from the fund's advisers. All private funds combined in the U.S. currently hold more than \$18T worth of gross assets. The sheer size of the combined funds implies that the adviser's practices and performance directly affect individuals in both the American and global marketplace.

The takeaway:

More disclosures will not likely have an impact on investor or capital formation; however, compliance teams will see their workload increase if the new requirements are passed.
