Investment in luxury apartments in Greenville, SC, pays back successfully

The project generated an annualized return of roughly 11.5%, supporting quarterly dividends for initially Income eREIT 2019 and then Income Interval Fund investors.¹

Important note: The realized return on an individual project may vary significantly from your portfolio-level return as an investor. To learn more about why this may be the case, see the “How did this project impact your portfolio?” section.

In September 2019, we invested roughly $14 million in the Poinsett Apartments, a 288-unit luxury apartment community in Greenville, SC.

The community was 97% occupied when we invested, and the project's sponsor planned to actively manage the property for five to ten years before seeking exit opportunities via sale or refinance.

Today, we're pleased to share that our sponsor has successfully sold the property and paid back our investment in full. Per the terms of our preferred structure investment (which is similar to debt), we earned an annualized return of roughly 11.5% over the life of the investment.¹

Investor FAQ: How does this project impact your portfolio?

This investment was structured like debt, where the project's sponsor must pay us a fixed rate of return before they can earn a return for themselves, and their equity provides us with a cushion against losses. Throughout the term of this investment, the regular income it generated supported quarterly dividends for the Income eREIT 2019 and then for the Income Interval Fund.

This investment is part of our broader Fixed Income strategy, which has historically consisted primarily of short to medium-term loans or financing of new development. While we are actively evaluating the most attractive strategies to deploy into new income-generating investments in the current, historically low interest rate environment, it is reasonable to expect that yields on private real estate investments in the near term would generally be lower than they have been in the past (along with most other asset classes).
