Tradeable Index Strategies

Extending our franchise as a leader in Index research, J.P. Morgan has developed proprietary Tradeable Index Strategies to allow investors to gain exposure to key asset classes, benchmarks, and dynamic trading strategies. Our Tradeable Index Strategies offer clients the opportunity to maximize portfolio returns and quickly exploit market activities across bull and bear scenarios within the Credit, Commodity, FX, Fixed Income, Emerging Market and Equity asset classes.

Important Risk Considerations related to the Tradeable Index Strategies

Investing in any of the Tradeable Index Strategies involves significant risks, including but not limited to:

- Past performance is not indicative of future results;
- Investment related to the value of commodities, credit, fixed income or foreign exchange can be more volatile than traditional securities investments;
- Commodity futures contracts that are the underlying of the C-IGAR strategies are subject to uncertain legal and regulatory regimes;
- Owning an investment linked to one of the Tradeable Index Strategies involves risks associated with investing in momentum strategies;
- Strategies that can take short positions potentially expose an investor to a theoretical unlimited loss; and
- The Tradeable Index Strategies lack an operational history.
