Choosii

Collectors have no lunch table. Why? Social platforms and marketplaces haven't been designed to meet our needs. Social platforms are the first table, designed to help us find people. Marketplaces are the second table, designed to help us find things. We want to be able to attach ourselves —our communities, our clout, to our things. But these tables weren't designed for that relationship — these spaces feel anonymous and transactional — not comfy to sit at —making us feel stressed, and disconnected.

What if we added a third table for collectors, one that was designed to create relationships between us, our friends and the things that we're obsessed with? Choosii is a hyper-specific virtual convention that's made for your collections' vibe; where everyone who's into the same stuff as you, is in the same room. It's a space where we can be authentic as collectors; curate and connect over our collections—and buy from our new besties' to support their collections too. Welcome to a new collective of collectors, where it doesn't matter what kind of weird you are, or what's in your lunchbox, you belong here.

More than 60% of Americans collect items, and it's not just for investment purposes! The market for collectibles is expected to grow to $800 billion by 2025. So, what's fueling this trend? Well, remote work culture is on the rise, and since we're spending more time at home, it's essential we have the ability to flip the switch to our hobbies that provide a break from it all. Also, by transforming the journey itself, Choosii goes beyond the end goal of building a collection. It's no secret that the next generation values social responsibility—they support their friends and community because they want their dollars to make an impact. The result? Interactions that build supportive relationships in immersive spaces that feel like their own.

With social commerce, we're able to monetize our community through transaction fees and our social experience through targeted ads.

Our earliest go-to-market tactics are leveraging in-app contests, collabs and contributing brand experiences to conventions where obsessives gather. And we've started walking the walk. In our first two months, we've put on giveaways, networking mixers, contributed a choosii selfie station at an anime con and with more to come!

Here at Choosii HQ, we believe in a little healthy competition, and how can you blame us? So how is Choosii different? While Reddit and Discord are optimized for speech, making it difficult to distinguish oneself from the crowd, Pinterest and Instagram can feel like broadcasting your aesthetic judgment--“mind-mapping” if you will--without fostering that sense of authenticity or ownership that we specifically want. Niche-item marketplaces, on the other hand, tend to focus on “what” you’re buying rather than on “who” you are. This leaves a lot of people wanting more; they want to be more than just consumers, they want to be creators as well.

What are Choosii's advantages? UGC-first, we believe that what's not for sale (just flexing) is just as important as what is for sale. Because we recognize every collector's need for community rituals and the support we feel in keeping our community updated: nerding out & building our best collections, together. Easy participation means being a creator is as simple as posting what you've found from around the world - you don't have to be competitive, charismatic or a full-time analyst about the items you collect, and being a consumer doesn't require you to spend hours babysitting auctions. Finally, Choosii is a horizontal platform rather than a "vertical" one. We're not just a "marketplace for sneakers" or a "marketplace for trading cards." We believe in improving individuality and the influence of authentic interactions. No matter what criteria you use to collect, or how unique your collection (creepy dolls, samurai swords, cacti shaped like 🍷s, etc.), we made it our mission to support your need for a better community, identity, and economy.

David knows his way around an event and an collab. He paddled here from BuzzFeed and Complexcon so he knows strategic fun like he lives and breathes it (and we're told he's caught the collectors' bug for rare plants....I'm sensing a pattern here, are you?)
