US Army Mission Command Battle Lab

Director

August 2012 - June 2015 (2 years 11 months)

Fort Leavenworth, KS

Director of the 49-person Mission Command Battle Lab at the Combined Arms Center, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. The Mission Command Battle Lab's three divisions--Experimentation, Science and Technology, and Information Technology Support--focus on the future and contribute to improving Mission Command capabilities across the Army, primarily at the Division headquarters level and higher.

The Battle Lab's core competencies are research, experimentation, analysis, critical thinking and innovation. The Lab is part of a larger network of other Army labs (e.g. Maneuver at Ft Benning, Air Maneuver at Ft Rucker, Intelligence at Ft Huachuca, and others) which incorporates modeling and simulation tools to test future structure designs and theories. The Battle Lab provides graduate-level feedback, observations, and analysis to inform senior decision-makers at Training and Doctrine Command and the Army Staff. The Battle Lab partners with industry, academia, federal agencies, and other services in science and technology advances through mutually supporting studies which provide a second channel to design improvements or changes to the future Army force.
