Note 6. Reinsurance, page F-48

1. We are considering your response submitted on July 25, 2012. You state in the first paragraph of your response that "the main risks associated with the transaction are the risk that the initial premium paid to Midwest by Security National was inadequate, that the interest earned on assets assumed may or may not produce investment yields commensurate with the guaranteed rates on the deferred annuities, and the risk that obligations will have to be paid sooner than expected." The main risk described here does not appear to be insurance risk, but appears to be investment risk. The definition of insurance risk in the ASC Master Glossary notes that actual or imputed investment returns are not an element of insurance risk. Please explain to us further how the single premium deferred annuity is an insurance contract and how there is a reasonable possibility that you may realize a significant loss from assuming insurance risk under the agreement with Security National. Include in your response the following information about the deferred annuity contracts assumed:

- If a policy holder were to die prior to purchasing an annuity or surrendering the contract, the benefit appears to be limited to the contract's surrender value. Explain to us how the obligation to pay the policy beneficiary the contract's surrender value exposes you to underwriting and timing risk and a reasonably possibility that you will realize a significant loss from assuming insurance risk;
- Tell us if the terms of the deferred annuity contract contain an insurance component that provides a substantive death benefit during the accumulation phase;
- If there is no substantive death benefit during the accumulation phase, explain to us how there is a reasonable possibility that you would realize a significant loss from assuming insurance risk;
- Tell us the amount of claims paid since you have assumed these contracts to the policy beneficiaries as a result of an insured event;
- Explain to us how the contracts contain significant mortality risk necessary to be categorized as an insurance contract. For example, since the premium was fully paid up front, it appears that you were not exposed to the risk of foregoing future premiums; and
- Tells us if any contract holders have purchased an annuity and how you have evaluated this new contract under the agreement. As noted in ASC 944-20-15-17 a contract provision that allows the holder of a long-duration contract to purchase an annuity at a guaranteed price on settlement of the contract does not entail a mortality risk until the right to purchase is executed. If purchased, the annuity is a new contract to be evaluated on its own terms.
