HIGHLIGHTS

- F-Series increases leadership position: F-150 and Super Duty combined sales outstripped our nearest competitor by 94,585 trucks – which is 15,939 higher than this point last year. F-Series ended the quarter with an average transaction price of $47,454 as customers continue to choose high series and the latest technologies. F-Series incentive spending in Q1 was lowest among all major full-size pickups.
- Ranger returns, boosts Ford's truck franchise: Ford sold 9,421 Rangers in Q1. Combined with F-Series, this reflects Ford's best first quarter of pickup sales in 15 years – even before Ranger reaches optimum inventory levels later this year.
- Even ahead of new Explorer and Escape launches this year, Ford-brand SUVs set first-quarter sales record: SUV sales increased 3.5 percent versus last year, representing a new first-quarter record totaling 193,753 vehicles. This is driven by robust Expedition performance – up 61.9 percent with 21,773 Expeditions sold. Combined Ford and Lincoln SUV sales are up 5 percent.
- Industry-leading strength in Commercial and Government continues in Q1: On the strength of Transit, the all-new Transit Connect and F-Series, Ford increased sales year-over-year, building on our leadership position in these profitable and growing segments.
- Lincoln books its best start to the year in more than a decade: Lincoln delivers an 11.2 percent gain in the first quarter, thanks to strong growth across its SUV lineup.

"First quarter 2019 sales were solid for Ford. Our winning portfolio continues to deliver. F-Series expanded our leadership position while others slugged it out for second place. We have a close connection with our customers, allowing us to deliver what they need in their trucks. It can also be seen in our record sales of Ford SUVs as well as Lincoln's significant growth."
