PART I

Item 1. Business

General and Significant Events

Pioneer-Standard Electronics, Inc. was organized as an Ohio corporation in 1963 and maintains its principal office at 6065 Parkland Boulevard, Mayfield Heights, Ohio 44124 (telephone number (440) 720-8500). Except as otherwise stated, the term “Company” as used herein shall mean Pioneer-Standard Electronics, Inc. and its subsidiaries.

The Company is a broad-line distributor of electronic components and mid-range computer products for leading manufacturers and strives to be the preferred strategic link between suppliers and customers. The Company operates warehouse, distribution and value added centers throughout North America. In addition, the Company continues to increase its global presence through strategic investments. These investments further the Company’s growth strategy by offering access to an extensive distribution network in the Asia Pacific region and Europe, and to markets within the United States.

During fiscal 2001, the Company acquired an equity interest in Magirus AG, a European computer systems distributor headquartered in Stuttgart, Germany. The Company also increased its investments in existing affiliates, World Peace Industrial Co. Ltd., an Asian distributor of electronics headquartered in Taipei, Taiwan, and Eurodis Electron PLC, a European distributor of electronic components headquartered in London, England.

The Company has made strategic investments in small start-up software companies that offer tool sets with the potential to dramatically improve supply chain management in the electronic components industry. The Company acquired an 85% interest in Supplystream, Inc., a company specializing in supply chain decision support tools. The Company also made a financial investment in Aprisa, Inc., a company that provides Web-based engineering services to speed product to market by enabling a fast and thorough design discovery process.

Description of Segments

Historically, the Company’s operations have been classified into two reportable business segments, the distribution of electronic components and the distribution of computer products, which are managed separately based on product and market differences. During the fourth quarter of 2001, in combination with the completion of a financial system implementation and enhancements to internal reporting available for senior management decisions, the Company redefined its reportable segments and established a third segment, Corporate and Other. The revised segment presentation reflects how management allocates resources, measures performance and views the overall business.

Industrial Electronics. The Company’s Industrial Electronics Division is a broad-line distributor of semiconductors, interconnect, passive and electromechanical (“IPE”) components, power supplies and embedded computer products. Semiconductors are the building blocks of computer chips and include microprocessors, memory and programmable logic devices, and analog and digital integrated circuits. IPE products are devices that move or use an electrical signal and include capacitors, connectors, resistors, switches and power conditioning equipment. This segment also provides value added services associated with industrial electronic products, such as point of use inventory management, just-in-time kitting operations, turnkey assembly, memory and logic device programming, connector and cable assemblies to customer specifications and power products integration. Sales of industrial electronics products constituted 51% of the Company’s total sales in fiscal 2001, compared with 52% in 2000 and 50% in 1999.

The semiconductor market historically has experienced fluctuations in product supply and demand associated with technology changes and supply capability occurring from time to time. At times when product supply has been high relative to demand, prices for those products have declined. The Company has attempted to minimize the effect of these price fluctuations in its distribution arrangements. The Company’s gross margins may nevertheless be negatively affected if an excess supply of semiconductors causes a general decline in prices for those products. If there is a shortage of semiconductor supply, the Company’s results of operations will depend on how much product it is able to obtain from suppliers and how quickly the Company receives shipments of those products.

There can be no assurance that supply and demand fluctuations in the semiconductor market will not have a material adverse effect on the Company's results of operations and business.

Computer Systems. The Company's Computer Systems Division is a distributor and reseller of mid-range computer systems and high-end platforms, storage subsystems, software, servers and networking products. As a complement to its systems distributor operations, the Company provides value added services, including systems integration, enterprise resource planning systems design and network consulting. The Company's systems products and value added services accounted for 49% of the Company's sales in fiscal 2001 compared with 48% in 2000 and 50% in 1999.

The Computer Systems Division distributes many products that are used in the manufacturing or configuration of mid-range computer systems and high-end platforms. The technology used in these products has changed rapidly over the last several years, resulting in short product life cycles. Because the Company's customers have been forced to replace systems that have become technologically obsolete in a relatively short period of time, the Company has experienced substantial demand for these products that has contributed significantly to its revenue growth. A slowdown in this market could have a substantial negative effect on the Company's revenues and results of operations.

Corporate & Other. Corporate & Other primarily includes investments in affiliates and selected other assets, fixed assets, related depreciation and goodwill amortization, certain corporate management costs and special charges.

For financial information regarding the Company's business segments, see Note 13 of the Notes to Consolidated Financial Statements of the Company.

Products Distributed And Sources of Supply

The Company distributes products supplied by more than 200 manufacturers. A majority of the Company's revenues comes from products sourced by relatively few suppliers. During the 2001 fiscal year, products purchased from the Company's three largest suppliers accounted for 53% of the Company's sales volume. The largest three suppliers, Compaq, IBM and Intel Corporation, supplied 18%, 24% and 11%, respectively, of the Company's sales volume. The loss of any one of the top three suppliers and/or a combination of certain other suppliers could have a material adverse effect on the Company's business, results of operations and financial condition unless alternative products manufactured by others are available to the Company.

Inventory

The Company must maintain certain levels of inventory in order to ensure that the lead times to its customers remain competitive. However, to minimize its inventory exposure, the Company has arrangements with certain of its suppliers for just-in-time product delivery. The majority of the products sold by the Company are purchased pursuant to distributor agreements, which generally provide for inventory return privileges by the Company upon cancellation of a distributor agreement. The distributor agreements also typically provide protection to the Company for product obsolescence and price erosion. Although the Company believes that its relationships with suppliers are good, there can be no assurance that the Company's suppliers will continue to supply products to the Company on terms acceptable to the Company.

The Company's results of operations depend in part on successful management of the challenges of rapidly changing technology and evolving industry standards characteristic of the markets for industrial electronics and computer systems products. These challenges include predicting the nature and timing of technological changes and the direction of evolving industry standards; identifying, obtaining and successfully marketing new products as they emerge; and minimizing the risk of loss due to inventory obsolescence. Some of the Company's competitors may be able to market products that have perceived advantages over the products distributed by the Company or that render the products distributed by the Company obsolete or more difficult to market. Although the Company attempts to minimize the effects of inventory obsolescence in its distribution arrangements, the Company may have high inventories of unsold product if a new technology renders a product distributed by the Company less desirable or obsolete. In addition, customers may be less willing, for financial or other reasons, to purchase the new products necessary to use new technologies.

Customers

The Company serves customers in many major markets of North America. Both of the Company's operating segments have a varied customer base which includes original equipment manufacturers (which constitute the core customer base of the Industrial Electronics segment), value added resellers, research laboratories, government agencies and commercial end-users, including manufacturing companies and service and other non-manufacturing organizations. No single customer accounted for more than ten percent of the Company's total sales or the sales of either operating segment during the fiscal year 2001.

Backlog

The Company historically has not had a significant backlog of orders, although some shipments may be scheduled for delivery over an extended period of time. There was not a significant backlog at March 31, 2001.

Competition

The sale and distribution of electronic components and computer systems products are highly competitive, primarily with respect to price and product availability, but also with respect to service, variety and availability of products carried, number of locations and promptness of service. The Company also faces intense competition with respect to obtaining sources of supply for products distributed, and in developing and maintaining relationships with customers. In the case of semiconductor and computer systems products, the Company competes for customers with other distributors as well as with some of its suppliers. Many of the distributors with which the Company competes are regional or local distributors. However, several of the Company's strongest competitors have national and international distribution businesses and have greater financial and other resources, which may enable them to compete more effectively. Also, it is possible that an increasing number of suppliers may decide to distribute products directly to the customer, which would further heighten competitive pressures. Due to continuing competitive pressures, the Company's margins have declined in recent years, and the Company expects continued pressure on margins in the foreseeable future.

Industry Consolidation. The electronic components distribution industry and the computer systems distribution industry have become increasingly concentrated in recent years as companies have combined or formed strategic alliances. If this trend continues, new business combinations or strategic alliances may have a competitive advantage if their potentially greater financial, technical, marketing or other resources allow them to negotiate relationships with suppliers that are more favorable than the Company's relationships with its suppliers. If such relationships develop, these new business combinations or strategic alliances may be able to offer lower prices that could precipitate an industrywide decline in prices. This decline would have a negative impact on the Company's margins, and could cause a decline in the Company's revenues and loss of market share.

Growth through Acquisitions

The Company continually reviews acquisition prospects and strategic alliances that could complement its existing lines of business and its balanced business model, augment its volume and/or geographic coverage or provide opportunities to expand into new markets. The Company's continued growth depends in part on its ability to find suitable acquisition candidates and to consummate strategic acquisitions. To fund acquisition costs, the Company may issue equity securities, which could dilute the holdings of existing shareholders, or incur debt, which could result in additional leveraging. These actions could have a material adverse effect on the Company's financial condition and results of operations or the price of the Company's Common Shares. Furthermore, acquiring businesses always entails risk and uncertainties. The Company may not be able to integrate the operations of the acquired businesses successfully, and the failure to do so could have a material adverse impact on the Company's business and results of operations.

Employees

As of March 31, 2001, the Company had 2,581 employees. The Company is not a party to any collective bargaining agreements, has had no strikes or work stoppages and considers its employee relations to be excellent.

Distribution

The Company distributes its products principally in the United States and Canada. Export sales are not a significant portion of the Company’s sales.

Item 2. Properties

The Company owns an 87,000 square foot facility and a 32,000 square foot facility, each located in Cleveland, Ohio. The larger facility houses certain corporate, accounting and information system functions, while the smaller building serves as a corporate storage facility. In addition, the Company owns a 106,000 square foot facility, located in Twinsburg, Ohio. The Twinsburg facility houses the Company’s Industrial Electronics Distribution Center. Certain of the Company’s corporate offices are located in a 60,450 square foot facility in Mayfield Heights, Ohio, to which the Company entered into an 11-year lease in April 1999. The Company’s operations occupy a total of approximately 1,427,000 square feet, with the majority, approximately 1,284,000 square feet, devoted to product distribution facilities and sales offices. Of the approximately 1,427,000 square feet occupied, 225,000 square feet are owned and 1,202,000 square feet are occupied under operating leases. The Company’s facilities of 100,000 square feet or larger, as of March 31, 2001, are set forth in the table below.
