FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

TEVA AND SAVIENT RECEIVE FAVORABLE COURT RULING ON HUMAN GROWTH HORMONE PATENT SUITS

Jerusalem, Israel, August 5, 2004 – Teva Pharmaceutical Industries Ltd. (Nasdaq: TEVA) and Savient Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (NASDAQ:SVNT) today announced that the United States District Court for the District of Delaware has found invalid and unenforceable due to inequitable conduct, Novo Nordisk's (NYSE:NVO) U.S. Patent No. 5,633,352 relating to recombinant human growth hormone. This ruling, which follows the completion of a trial in August 2003, paves the way for the U.S. commercialization of Savient's FDA approved recombinant human growth hormone.

Savient's recombinant human growth hormone for the treatment of growth hormone deficiency in children is marketed in over 30 countries worldwide and is licensed to Teva for distribution in the United States. The U.S. pediatric market for recombinant human growth hormones is approximately $500 million and currently growing at an annual rate of 12%.

Christopher Clement, President and CEO of Savient stated: "This is excellent news. We are very pleased with the District Court's ruling that Novo's patent is invalid and unenforceable. With the clarity provided by these decisions, we will proceed with our plans to bring our human growth hormone to market in the United States later this year. We have every confidence in Teva's ability to establish a significant presence in the market once Tev-Tropin™ is introduced."

Israel Makov, President and CEO of Teva commented: "We are gratified by this recent Court decision. We will now work with our partner Savient to take the necessary steps to prepare ourselves for the launch of this product."

Teva Pharmaceutical Industries Ltd., headquartered in Israel, is among the top 25 pharmaceutical companies and among the largest generic pharmaceutical companies in the world. The company develops, manufactures and markets generic and innovative human pharmaceuticals and active pharmaceutical ingredients. Close to 90% of Teva's sales are in North America and Europe.
