Open Learning Agency Goes Live with Latest Knowledge Management Technology for E-Learning

Vancouver, BC (January 7, 2002) – ThoughtShare Communications Inc. today announced that the Open Learning Agency (OLA) has gone live using Thoughtscape, ThoughtShare's information organizing solution, to assist in the development of its online education programs. An internationally recognized educational institution and a key strategic customer in the e-learning marketplace, OLA has committed to Thoughtscape as part of their mission to provide the latest in cutting-edge, versatile learning products.

Thoughtscape allows customers to intuitively find, organize, personalize and present information. This co-branded version of Thoughtscape will be utilized by OLA course designers to plan and develop curriculum, as well as deliver course material in the form of Thoughtscape PAKs. Thoughtscape will also be distributed to OLA students to help them in conducting research, as well as encouraging peer-to-peer collaboration.

"OLA's vision is to be an international leader in the educational use of technology and the delivery of non-traditional learning opportunities," says Enid McCauley, Director of Product Development at OLA. "ThoughtShare's web-based information management solution fits in extremely well with our strategy because it provides an innovative system that allows our staff and students to leverage the wealth of information that exists in today's world."

"ThoughtShare has always been at the forefront in terms of features and functionality, and we plan to stay ahead of the game, even as we work towards firmly establishing ourselves in new markets," says Fred Fabro, President of ThoughtShare. "OLA understands the universal importance of intuitive information management, and is demonstrating its client commitment by investing in our technology."

About Open Learning Agency
