New York, June 14th, 2002. - ENDESA Energía is Spain's largest joint supplier of gas and electricity services to large customers, with a 2002 expected sales of around 26,000 GWh, of which 82% will correspond to electricity and 18% to gas.

ENDESA Energía, with a customer base of 8,373 large customers, has been the first electricity supplier to be engaged in the joint supply of gas and electricity and, since January 2001, has managed to sign supply contracts for around 4.4 billion thermies p.a.

Last year, ENDESA consolidated its position as reference supplier of gas, electricity and other services to industries such as chemical and automotive. Its customer base includes the likes of Dow Chemical, General Motors, Saint Gobain and Nestlé and is well-balanced by industry sector, final uses (industrial process, cogeneration) and geographical location.

ENDESA Energía's commercial strategy is based on value-added proposals for its customers' needs, which contemplate integrated solutions for the supply of gas and electricity, risk management and other related services.

ENDESA aims at becoming a multi-energy provider for large and retail customers, especially in view of the upcoming full market liberalisation in 2003. In mid term, ENDESA aims at a 15% share in the gas supply market to large and residential customers in Spain. ENDESA's gas supply needs are guaranteed.
