RE: File No: 4-606

Dear Ms. Murphy:

I am a financial planner and a Registered Investment Advisor with 55 clients handling $13,000,000 assets under management. In my practice, I have been servicing clients under a fiduciary standard of care for 2 years. I strongly urge you to extend the Advisers Act fiduciary standard of care to all financial professionals who provide personalized investment advice to retail clients.

It is unfair to consumers that the quality of advice they receive from a financial professional is dependent on the professional's registration or title. It's no wonder consumers are confused, and do not know whether their financial professional is looking out for their best interests. I can tell you from my personal experience that adhering to the fiduciary standard of care and putting my clients' interests ahead of my own benefits my clients and my business.

The fiduciary standard is the highest standard I am aware of that can be applied to my profession. The same standard has been used for years, successfully, in both the medical (doctors) and legal (lawyers) professions. Sure there are still dishonest and unethical doctors and lawyers, just as we have those in my profession as well. However, expecting or allowing our profession to have any lower of standard, just because we are handling people's money, is wrong. The way people handle their money can have a huge impact on their health and future generations. I encourage you to insist on the best for those in my profession, as well, by upholding a fiduciary standard of care.

My clients recognize and understand that the advice I give them is in their best interests, because: my loyalty is to them first; I will advise them with utmost good faith; I will manage any conflicts of interests that may harm them and disclose those conflicts to them; I get paid for the advice I give them and the investments I select for them; I am required to choose from the best investments available keeping their interests first; and I can charge a fee or commissions based on their needs and preferences.

Adhering to the fiduciary standard of care does not limit my ability to provide my clients with appropriate services and products. As a fiduciary, I can choose to operate in a business model that is best for my client. The key is fully disclosing, and avoiding and fairly managing conflicts of interest. Providing financial advice with fiduciary accountability does not reduce services to middle Americans. It insures that the services consumers receive will be in their best interests -- not in the best interests of the financial intermediary or his or her company.

I urge you to recommend to Congress that it is necessary and appropriate in the public interest and for the protection of consumers to extend the fiduciary standard to broker-dealers, who provide personalized investment advice, and to initiate a rulemaking to achieve this long overdue consumer reform.

Sincerely,

Thomas Cloud, Jr., CFP(R)
