RE: Disclosure Rules for Corporate Contributions to Political Campaigns

Dear Ms. White:

Congratulations on your appointment as Chair of the Securities and Exchange Commission. I am hopeful that a woman with your background, experience and team can make a significant impact on the reporting requirements that assist investors to make informed decisions about where to place their capital.

I have never written a letter to a public official, but after the presidential campaign of 2012, I resolved to make an effort to reach out to leaders in key positions. I am a small business owner in Colorado. I make political contributions and those contributions are tracked and disclosed to the public via the internet.

If corporations wish to protect their ability to contribute to political campaigns, I feel it is reasonable for the investing public to receive full disclosure of those contributions (whether they be direct to a candidate, through the use of a PAC or a Super PAC) within the annual reports for those entities.

Investors have a right to understand how their publically held company invests its capital.

Thank you for your service and good luck.

Sincerely,

Natasha Felten
President
