

File No.:S7-08-09

Dear SEC,

I beg that you rush the re-evaluation of the "Uptick Rule" in order to boost consumers' confidence and regain a stable economy. I support the restriction on short selling on a market wide permanent approach of which will allow investors to freely place their bids without any interference.

I think is a good idea to impose the short sale price test in the nation's best interest in a particular security for the remainder of the day if there is a decline in the security price.

Since the Uptick Rule was eliminated two years ago, investors confident have deteriorated the stock market industry. Confidence needs to be instituted so that all individual investors will feel the need of protection that the regulators care about investors.

Please bring it back.

Sincerely,

Sherron Hylton
