

January 21, 2010

Hello SEC,

I'm writing because I've watched naked short sellers destroying stock shares of companies for the last decade. Every so often, somebody actually lifted a finger to do something, usually too little too late. At first I couldn't believe it, that the SEC was powerless to stop the ravages, but then I watched as I was forced to believe it. Due to losses from naked short sellers attacking my dad's stocks, we were unable to provide him with medical care and he died in 1995. So now I realize beyond convincing otherwise that when someone steals peoples' life savings by naked short selling fraud, they are committing murder by denying all those victims who are counting on those funds for their medical treatment. In short, the thieves are murderers.

Funny, isn't it? The armed services and civilian agencies all use violent methods to protect us from harm and keep us safe at nights in our homes. Someone asked me, and maybe you can give me the answer for them, if we have the choice and capability to stop the violence naked short sellers are committing against those victims who now are going to die because they are reduced to paupers with the cheapest, poorest of medical care, like one man who couldn't afford a $15,000 bladder operation who then was sent home to die/struggle on (he died), when laws and actions based on laws aren't capable to stop or just aren't doing it, who do we let die? Do we let the victims die, Greg? or is it better that the short selling thieves die that murder them?

I don't have an answer. What do you have to say? I'll be glad to pass the message along.

This is why people liked Bonnie & Clyde, who my grandpa RE Newman got into a famous Mexican standoff with here in San Antone, during the bank failures. Sure, they were murderers, but the banking thieves who left the people penniless and their stocks worthless murdered thousands across the country who died of everything from starvation to broken hearts.

I'm ashamed to say I'm an American. Just look at all the money lost to drugs every day. Yesterday, driving down one of our 'nice' streets, I noticed only 1 out of 5 streetlights were on. Conserving energy. Conserving MONEY due to all the rip-off artists that destroyed our economy, our country. Add to them the drug money going out of our city and all the others. If it wasn't for all these criminals in banking, stocks and drugs, our streets would have TWICE as many lights on them and ALL of them would be working; our streets' pavement wouldn't have holes and bumps on main thoroughfares or side streets; our schools, cars, clothes, neighborhoods, society, would be a wonderland of beauty overflowing with bounty. Instead we've all been robbed.

Your streets in your city are the same way. However nice you think it is today, just tell yourselves to imagine what it COULD look like if all that drug money wasn't sapped from us every day and sent to our enemies around the world (certainly they aren't our friends hooking our country on drugs, are they?). People would all have jobs. Everywhere there would be beautiful benches to sit on, homes prettier, people happier from not being out of work, much less anger in the streets which is now the norm in San Antonio not just on highways here but now on every street anger flows and provocations abound. People wouldn't be dying in the winter because they didn't have heat or in the summer because they couldn't afford a lousy stinking fan. Cities would be able to provide all the services to all the people that need them.

But stock/banking thieves and drug lords, this current America is what we have to give thanks to them for. And don't tell me, Love it or leave it. My dad is HR Newman on the cover of Stars & Stripes who did plenty for the country in the war and here at home. What I'm saying is the truth. People are living an illusion, most of us are. All we have to do to see that is to imagine how it would be, not the impossible dream, but how it would be if only this country's people weren't being drained by stock and banking thieves alongside the drug lords they all too often launder the money for.

Remember, however beautiful you think your neighborhood is, that's NOTHING compared to how it would be without the thieves (murderers) draining us. Think about it the next time your loved ones can't afford their medications because their deductible is so high it takes all their food/spare money to afford it, and then they end up staying home eating sandwiches the rest of the month ... when these $1000 - 10,000 treatments can't be reduced because any money that could help reduce that has gone into the pockets of thieves, murderers, drug lords.

I know you can't do it all yourself. When we worked in police work, we didn't know who we could trust ... at the San Antonio Police Department! That many of them were on the take from ... drug lords. Maybe you're in the same boat. Dirty officials who are deadly and threaten your families. Maybe we should stop fighting fair.

The streets and homes of America are NOT nearly as wonderful as they SHOULD be. There is power in the people. You have to continue to appeal to the masses of people and trust that the good ones will come to your aid. Don't give up and don't give in. Infiltrate those bastards, destroy them, take back the booty. This is war.

Sincerely,

Greg Newman