Americans for Financial Reform's Public Comment on the Offices of Minority and Women Inclusion's Proposed Interagency Policy Statement

Dear Ms. Cofield, Ms. Clark, Ms. Brooks, Ms. James, Mr. Ishimaru, and Ms. Gibbs,

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform (AFR), we thank you for the opportunity to respond to the Request for Comments on the "Proposed Interagency Policy Statement Establishing Joint Standards for Assessing the Diversity Policies and Practices of Entities Regulated by the Agencies." AFR is a coalition of more than 250 national, state, and local groups who have come together to advocate for reform of the financial industry. Members of AFR include consumer, civil rights, investor, retiree, community, labor, faith based, and business groups along with prominent independent experts.

Background

Section 34 of the Dodd-Frank Act established 2 Offices of Minority and Women Inclusion (OMWIs) at the following financial regulatory agencies and federal reserve banks: the Department of the Treasury, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Securities and Exchange Commission, National Credit Union Administration, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Housing Finance Agency, Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, Federal Reserve Board of Governors, and the 1 Federal Reserve regional banks. Each agency's OMWI director is charged with increasing workforce and supplier diversity in the financial sector. Section 342 also mandates that each OMWI director develop standards for assessing the diversity policies and practices of entities that are regulated by the agency.

When Rep. Maxine Waters (D-CA) proposed Section 342 in 2010 she explained "I wrote this legislation to make sure that federal financial regulatory agencies ensure diversity in their hiring and promotion, as well as in their contracting, so that competent and qualified minorities and women and minority-, women- and small-businesses have a seat at the table."¹

The OMWIs proposed standards have the potential to affect nearly 70,000 institutions, millions of jobs, and billions of dollars in contracting. AFR supports measures to implement standards and promote transparency when it comes to increasing diversity in the financial sector, and believes that this area needs greater attention. The NAACP has found that top management positions remain dominated by white employees despite programs implemented to increase diversity, and that the percentage of African Americans in management positions in the financial services has actually fallen somewhat since 2000.² Additionally, an analysis by the Greenlining Institute on 19 of the 20 federal financial regulatory agencies that have created an OMWI, found that the ethnic and racial makeup of the financial regulators does not reflect the American workforce. In fact, the report found that diversity in executive management positions is low at all agencies relative to the share of minorities in the civilian labor force.³

Abusive practices in the lending industry have disproportionately impacted minority communities, and more diverse leadership should be one ingredient of changing this. The impact of abusive mortgage lending, for example, has been particularly pernicious. Minority borrowers received a disproportionate share of subprime mortgages, and were targeted for subprime loans even when they qualified for prime loans. In the lead up to the financial crisis Black and Latino high-income borrowers were three times as likely as high-income white borrowers to receive subprime loans.⁴

While loose regulations within the financial sector allowed entities to prey on all consumers, minority communities have suffered on a disproportionate level. The Center for Responsible Lending has estimated that between 2007-2009, African Americans experienced 79 completed foreclosures per 10,000 loans (originated between 2005-2008), Latino families experienced 76 foreclosures per 10,000 loans, and non-Hispanic White families experienced 452 foreclosures per 10,000 loans.⁵ And the costs of these foreclosures extend beyond the costs to individual families; in fact the foreclosure crisis has threatened, and continues to threaten, the financial stability and mobility of minority families and the communities in which they live. Increasing diversity within the financial sector is one key to keeping that sector more attuned to the impacts that financial products and services have—and will continue to have—on minority populations and the communities in which they live.

Th Proposed Joint Standards

The creation of the OMWIs in Section 342 of the Dodd-Frank Act is very important. Unfortunately, the proposed joint standards released by six of the federal agencies fall disappointingly short on specifics. In particular, the standards the group has proposed do not provide sufficient detail or uniformity, and do not provide strong enough accountability measures to ensure that the goals of increasing workforce and supplier diversity are met. These issues with the proposed standards, along with suggestions, are highlighted below.

Self-assessments

One problem with the proposed standards is that the agencies have chosen to rely on “self-assessment” by the financial firms they regulate. It would have significantly more impact if the OMWIs would devote staff and develop methodologies to conduct assessments of the entities that they regulate. Furthermore, the standards suggest voluntary disclosure of firms’ self-assessments to the appropriate agency, along with any other information the entity “deems relevant.” If the standards are to increase transparency and accountability on diversity, firms should be required to disclose their assessments. There is nothing in the statute that suggests that entities cannot be required to do so, and leaving the disclosures voluntary threatens to make the OMWIs, and their mission, essentially irrelevant.

In addition to being shared with the OMWI’s firms, self-assessments should be shared with the public. Especially because there are no specific diversity mandates permitted by the statute, in order to increase the impact of the standards, there should be an element of public accountability.

Assessment criteria and specifics

The proposed standards contain recommendations on best practices for assessments, but lack standardized assessment criteria. Unfortunately, this omission creates the risk that financial institutions could choose to only select reports on initiatives they currently have in place. Furthermore, without uniform metrics, stakeholders will have a hard time comparing financial institutions. AFR urges the agencies to issue standardized surveys both in order to gain an easily comparable understanding of regulated institutions' performance, and to ensure that key questions are covered. The creation of an advisory board could both provide feedback to and guide the OMWIs in crafting questionnaires with specific metrics; additionally questionnaires could be tailored to be appropriate to regulated entities of different sizes. Board members could include representatives from financial institutions, nonprofits, academia, and experts from other agencies and sectors that have successfully created diversity programs.

Reporting timelines and data analysis

The proposed standards do not specify procedures for collecting data on the composition of regulated entities and contractors' workforces and leadership on metrics such as race, ethnicity, and gender or what actions will be taken after such data is collected. The interagency group should conduct regular analysis of such data, and the scope of this analysis should be outlined in final interagency standards. The data collection process could be streamlined if OMWIs set regular deadlines for data submission as well as for OMWI analysis of collected data.

Limiting enforcement capabilities

Section 342(b)(4) significantly limits the OMWIs enforcement authority by stating that "nothing in paragraph (2)(c) may be construed to mandate any requirement or otherwise affect the lending policies and practices of any regulated entity, or to require any specific action based on the findings of the assessment." However, this language does not prohibit the OMWIs from creating stronger assessment standards than currently presented. Section 342(c)(1) of the law states that "the Director of each Office shall develop and implement standards and procedures to ensure, to the maximum extent possible, the fair inclusion and utilization of minorities, women, and minority-owned and women-owned businesses in all business and activities of the agency..." AFR urges the interagency OMWIs to strengthen their standards, and the procedures that will determine their impact, in order to meet these goals.

Sincerely,
