Dear Secretary,

I have heard of Rule 30e-3. It is my understanding that this rule would transfer the burden of getting information in a preferred medium from fund administration to individual investors.

I think this is a poor idea. I think that this burden will be too heavy for many investors and would not really understand the changes until it is too late. It is so hard for people to get a hold of these companies as is and that would just get harder. I believe that most people run their life as only making changes when they feel a change is needed. Anyone who wants to change their contact method to electronic is doing so. It is ingrained in us to not do anything if we do not want a change.

Paper is the best distribution for important information. It is the easiest to read, very secure and what most Americans are comfortable with.

Please do not move forward with Rule 30e-3.

Thank you,
