

To Whom It May Concern at SEC:

I believe there is a place in the world for short selling, however, the way short selling has been used by actors in the global financial system has proven to be abusive and we see that short selling has serious consequences. I propose that the Commission should require daily public disclosure of short positions. Why should bad actors be able to hide their worst investments in a place that no one else in the world can see them? The Commission should not do the bare minimum and the SEC has the power to require reporting of short selling activity once per month at minimum per Section 929X of Dodd-Frank. Proposed Rule 10c-1 requires intraday reporting of lending and proposed rule 13f-2 can require daily reporting of short selling.

Additionally, ETF's must be included in this rule because they can be used to synthetically short vulnerable stocks and circumvent regulations.

Sincerely,

Joseph Lambert
