Dear Murphy-

Aside from governing its own body, there is no other reason for the government to involve itself in every aspect of American life. We do not live in a society governed by socialism, nor should we start now. Changing the shareholder proxy access rule will allow for a socialist society. It will directly, as well as indirectly, affect both large and small businesses like mine, with interrupted delivery, decrease in consumer purchases and, more importantly, loss of business income.

The very reason my wife and I have been successful for the past five years in our own business is because we run it ourselves. We have six employees who receive good benefits, and we bring a necessary service to the community. The government is trying to impede the success of our business, because every time we turn around there is a new regulation, a newly imposed tax or another attempt at total control.

The government cannot run a business, nor should they be allowed to. My wife and I have plans to pass this business on to one or both of our daughters. We also hope to continue to benefit the economy by offering jobs and paying the taxes that keep social programs funded. The government could use a remedial course on running a business before stepping into this arena. You are cordially invited to come see how every paperclip and pencil is accounted for in my company. As you can see, I adamantly oppose the proposal to change the shareholder proxy access rule, and I hope you will too.

Sincerely,

Michael Arndt
