Elizabeth M. Murphy
Secretary, Securities and Exchange Commission
100 F Street Northeast
Washington, DC 20549

Dear Ms. Murphy:

News of the Securities and Exchange Commission's proposal to revise federal proxy rules regarding shareholder's rights brings to mind the fact that our government continues to undermine and meddle in the business world. My husband, Ted, and I incorporated in 2001 and opened the doors to our chiropractic office in late 2003. While we are a closely held company, we do business with suppliers who do business with other suppliers, and so on. No government actions should be taken to affect the way corporate America operates in the boardroom because all businesses will be affected in some way.

We are in the beginning stages of expanding our operations. Recently, we acquired the lease on the suite adjoining our current location. We will begin renovations to enlarge our facilities and grow our business next week. During this exciting phase of our company, it is disparaging to think that the government continues to want more control of the private sector.

As you consider comments from the general public, it is important to remember that small business owners create nearly eighty percent of the jobs that put food on the tables of American families. We do not need more of our freedoms eliminated, more paperwork to contend with, and more hassle to get our jobs done. The current rules for proxy access are successful and do not need to be changed.
