Dear Madam,

The recent economic problems our country has faced have been hard on me and my business. My restaurant has survived only because of my few faithful and habitual patrons. Foodservice is a very competitive industry, and I am blessed that I pulled through all our problems for this long. I understand and have read that some people would like to change the rules of shareholder proxy access. I was aware of these rules before this news reached me, but I did not know that such atrocious changes were being attempted. These changes will hurt our economy more than it could possibly do any good. Doing good, I'm afraid, is not what the people that want these changes made have in their heart. These changes are special interest driven and will give more control to the government over the corporate "free" world.

Being a good cook alone is not going to help me make it through the recession. My country and my government should be helping me and my business succeed, not intentionally doing it more harm! Now that I have finally seen an increase in customers and income, my government has decided to try to hurt the economy again. These changes just do not make sense. Putting unqualified appointees into corporate chairs to peddle their own agenda and special interest could not possibly help anyone or anything except lining their own pockets. My restaurant cannot afford these changes, and most other small businesses cannot either.

The rule changes have to be stopped. Shareholder proxy access needs to remain as it is. The government should be looking for solutions to help our economy, not creating propositions to destroy it. Please help our economy by deciding against the changes to shareholder proxy access.

Sincerely,

Noreka Taylor
