Dear Madam,

My websites are set up to sell products for companies I contract with. Each one depends on the supply of goods from my contract partners. Three of the largest retailers in the country provide the goods for my online inventory, so I believe shareholder proxy access may affect me in several ways. Corporate chairs should never be filled by politicians or government appointed special interests. The government attempting to move for a firmer grasp on yet another piece of free enterprise gives Americans a bad impression and gives the appearance that too much control is being taken.

Y.M. Inc depends on free enterprise remaining free. My web-based business requires all goods and services to remain affordable to me so I can be competitive. Corporate chairs being appointed by government agencies and special interests rising in big business will mean lowered share values and higher prices for small business owners like me. Also government appointed officials creating new protocols and rules in a business they have no experience in can only lead to major issues and hardship for the people trying to run profitable businesses in that industry.

Operating costs have increased around 20% over the last few years for Y.M. Inc and about the same amount for other small businesses my friends own. This has made remaining a profitable business even more difficult. The condition of the economy right now is bad enough and shareholder proxy access could only serve to exacerbate the problem. The proposed change to the rules of shareholder proxy access will hurt businesses and their owners everywhere in America. Please do not allow these changes to be made.

Sincerely,
