Dear Murphy:

When I decided to go into Chiropractic Medicine, I did so with the belief that I could help people naturally without the use of drugs and surgery. As a Doctor of Chiropractic Medicine, I believe strongly in my craft and the services that I offer my patients. Therefore, it was a no-brainer when I decided to open up my own practice five years ago. Not only could I offer this help to people, but I could also go into business for myself at the same time. The proposal to change the shareholder proxy access rule truly concerns me, because it leads me to believe the government wants to force its control over our country's businesses.

When you open your own business, you have certain ideas about how things should be run, but the bottom line is that you are the one who is running it. No one should be allowed to come into your business and tell you what to do with it. It also concerns me how this will impact the larger corporations I partner with for my supplies. If I cannot get deliveries in a timely fashion, then this will have a grammatically negative impact on my practice. Furthermore, it troubles me to think of what might happen to the 401k's and retirement plans people have. I do not want to witness the value of these go down should share prices drop due to this rule change.

Since our economy has taken a nosedive, it has affected businesses in my area significantly. There are less customers and less money being spent by those buying. If the government makes changes that will ultimately increase my cost to do business, then my income will be hindered. If that happens, my family will suffer. Please do what is best for working Americans, and oppose changes to the shareholder proxy access rule.

Thank you for your service.
