

Dear Ladies and Gentlemen at the SEC,

I write you this comment letter, because I think the proposed change towards a more competitive market have to be made. The ability of market makers to internalize orders does not comply with the general idea of a free market as not everyone participating has an influence on it. But how can there be true price discovery when certain influences are just ignored? There should be no difference if I buy a share, you buy a share, or a market maker buys a share. This is what a fair market would look like. Everything else is a distorted version and should not have been made possible in the first place. I hope you consider these points when you make the decision in this matter.

I hope you have a good week, sincerely,

Finn Bork
