

'we the people' are not a natural resource for you. I'm not sure where this idea came from, or how it became the status quo in this country, but I'm absolutely appalled that I'm now 35 years old having to write out a complaint letter on a SEC website, explaining to the very people whose job it is to enforce the law against market manipulation, that in fact, you haven't and evidence suggests that you've never really tried. This is a war against the have and have-nots. From the financial institutions and banks, to the politicians and the large and small companies they serve, to the Hedge Funds and Market Makers who consistently keep dumping their bag of bad investments on the retail investor and economy. Remember 2008? I do, and it makes my blood boil everytime I ruminante on those memories. I'm not sure what angers me more, the fact that the criminals involved in 2008 were never prosecuted, or the fact that you've allowed this mass market manipulation to continue and expect people like me not to notice. It's insulting. Just because you don't acknowledge it, doesn't mean that it's not there. Let's take a look at all these "financial analysts". Motley Fool, InvestorPlace, MarketWatch, SeekingAlpha, to name a few. All of whom have deliberately written articles based solely on market manipulation. Take for example a genomics stock that I think will have great value in the future. Bionano Genomics. A groundbreaking technology that has the potential to help every single person on this planet. I've been collecting a nice pile for a couple years now. During this time it seems evident that basic fundamentals and individual earnings are meaningless. They have no effect on the market. What's the point in playing a fair game when the other side is trading after hours in dark pools, spiking up short interest well beyond any mathematical calculation, writing disingenuous articles to install fear and doubt, trading millions of shares on algorithms that don't coincide with the actual float. It's sickening that none of you do anything about it. SICKENING. I'd appreciate it if the lot of you would do the job that you're hired for, because pretty soon there's not going to be a reason for writing in a complaint. Complaints are a courtesy out of respect, and I don't feel that respect goes both ways. Do better.
