CHAPTER IV. SECURITIES TRADED ON THE BOSTON OPTIONS EXCHANGE FACILITY

* * * * *

Sec. 1 through 5 No change.

Sec. 6 Series of Options Contracts Open for Trading

(a) through (e) No change.

(f) The interval of strike prices may be $2.50 in any multiply-traded option class to the extent permitted on BOX by the Securities and Exchange Commission or once another exchange trading that option lists strike prices of $2.50 on such options class.]

Supplementary Material to Section 6

.01 through .02 No change.

.03 [The options exchanges] BOX may select up to [200] 60 options classes on individual stocks for which the interval of strike prices will be $2.50 where the strike price is greater than $25 but less than $50 (the “$2.50 Strike Price Program”). [The 200 options classes are selected by the various options exchanges pursuant to any agreement mutually agreed to by the individual exchanges and approved by the Commission.] In addition to those options selected by BOX, the strike price interval may be $2.50 in any multiply-traded option once another exchange trading that option selects such option, as part of this program. [BOX and any of the other options exchanges may also list strike prices of $2.50 on any option class that was selected pursuant to this program by the NYSE.] On any option class that has been selected as part of this $2.50 Strike Price Program, $2.50 strike prices between $50 and $[75]100 may be listed, provided that $2.50 strike prices between $50 and $[75]100 are no more than $10 from the closing price of the underlying stock in its primary market on the preceding day. For example, if an options class has been selected as part of the $2.50 Strike Price Program, and the underlying security closes at $48.50 in its primary market, the Exchange may list the $52.50 strike price and the $57.50 strike price on the next business day. If an underlying security closes at $54.00, the Exchange may list the $52.50 strike price, the $57.50 strike price and the $62.50 strike price on the next business day. [The Exchange may list a strike price interval of $2.50 in any multiply-traded option once an exchange selects an option as part of the $2.50 Strike Price Program.]

.04 through .08 No change.

Sec. 7 through 8 No change.
