Types of Advisory Services Offered

Greylin Investment Management Inc. (Greylin Investment Management) was founded in 1992, and is privately owned and primarily operated by D. Gregory Parkinson.

Greylin Investment Management Inc (Greylin Investment Management) is a customer-oriented firm offering customized investment management, primarily for high net worth individuals, but also for small businesses, charitable or non-profit organizations and foundations. Investment services provided include a complete initial review and recommendations based on client goals and objectives, implementation of an investment program, account monitoring and evaluation, quarterly reports with investment performance compared to investment market indices, annual reports with tax-related information and complete historical record keeping on investment account activities and performance. These services are focused on using well-established investments primarily in the stocks of large, well-known companies with a long history of strong performance. Although we do have a few clients with a primary objective of capital preservation or income, most of our clients have a desire to see their account values and income rise over longer time periods. As a result, we specialize in investing for growth in those areas mainly by utilizing investments in diversified portfolios of individual stocks.

We discuss investment expectations and risk with our clients, and create portfolios tailored to meet those expectations over time. Ultimately, clients can indicate any particular types of investments which they desire to own, or restrict the purchase of investments which they wish to avoid. We want clients to be comfortable with the investments they own and with the investment results they achieve. We also want them to be fully aware of the various risks associated with different investment strategies.

Amount of Client Assets

As of December 31, 2011, Greylin Investment Management managed $311,537,937 in assets. Greylin Investment Management has discretionary investment authority over all of these accounts.

How Fees are Calculated and Collected

It is our continuing objective to keep our fees for investment management services at reasonable levels. Our standard fee schedules have not been increased at all since the original founding of the firm in January, 1993. It is our opinion that if the investment management process is handled correctly, then asset values should grow over time and our fees should rise as a result, without having to raise our rates to cover cost increases. We attempt to charge fees which are lower as a percentage of assets compared to most mutual funds, while providing customized investment management and reporting for clients.

Our fees are normally calculated and collected on a monthly basis by deducting the fees directly from the client's account(s). Fees are calculated based on the fee schedules, and billing statements are prepared and mailed, along with a letter explaining the period that the fees cover and when they will be deducted from the account(s). That way the client is aware of the fees that will be deducted for the prior period and can see how they were calculated and alert us if they have any questions or discrepancies.

Occasionally, clients would prefer to be charged on a quarterly basis or the accounts are so small that we elect to bill them on a quarterly or annual basis in order to be more economical. Clients are fully aware of this process, and the billing is done by averaging the monthly or quarterly values with a letter explaining the process and the periods covered. Again, no fees are deducted until after these statements have been sent out, and the investment management services have already been provided. Clients always have the option to pay their investment management fees by check and a few do, but almost all clients prefer to have the fees automatically deducted from their accounts.

Negotiated Fees

It is Greylin Investment Management's continuing objective to maintain a schedule of fees which will consistently be fair and reasonable in relation to the responsibilities assumed and the duties performed. As such, we occasionally will adjust our fees from the normal fee schedule in order to more fairly charge clients based on the scope of services provided. These adjustments can be higher than the standard fees or lower, depending on the specific circumstances. Most of the time we approach the particular client and suggest the alteration of our standard fees based on the situation. We try to look at the entire relationship and amount of time and effort involved in determining any changes to the fees that would normally be charged. Any altered fee schedule agreed to by the client is clearly outlined and detailed in billing statements sent out to them with a letter of explanation.

Other Fees and Expenses

Clients whose assets under management by Greylin Investment Management include mutual funds, exchange traded funds (ETFs), precious metal funds, publicly traded partnerships, closed end funds, or money market or cash funds should be aware that they are likely to incur two advisory fees on those assets. These two fees include the fee paid to Greylin Investment Management and also the fee paid by the investment entity to the mutual fund advisor or investment managers for that particular investment's operations. We attempt to keep these other types of investments with additional fees to a minimum, but occasionally they are appropriate for certain account situations in order to participate in unique investment opportunities in an economical fashion, or to reduce overall investment diversification efficiently at a low cost. When we do recommend or utilize mutual funds or other funds, we always recommend the use of "no-load" funds to clients.

Clients invested in individual securities will experience commission and brokerage charges for trades made in their accounts by Greylin Investment Management (see Brokerage Practices Section). We attempt to keep these transaction charges low, while still managing client investments in order to meet goals and objectives. Clients may choose any broker they wish to custody their assets and commissions and charges are determined by each particular broker. Greylin Investment Management receives absolutely no compensation as a result of any investment transactions.

We also make it a standard practice to be available for calls or meetings with clients as desired or needed by the client. We do not charge for this time or for consultations, but consider it to be part of our overall investment management services and covered under our fee arrangements.

Potential Conflicts of Interest

In any type of fee arrangement there exists potential conflicts of interest, but we have attempted to minimize them by receiving no compensation for selling investment products or from investment transactions. Our commitment and goals are in line with our clients', namely to minimize costs while increasing the value of their assets over time. However, because we are compensated based on the value of assets, we could conceivably employ a "swing for the fences" investment approach where only high risk investments were made in order to get high returns and boost our fees without worrying about the higher risks and potential for losses that these investments would carry. This type of approach would likely result in longer term failure as higher risk investments surely would suffer some significant losses over time and cause account values and Greylin Investment Management fees to decline. We think our history of investment management and steady growth in account values over long periods of time are indicative of our more conservative approach toward investing. We especially focus on investments which are less volatile and work constantly to reduce risks in portfolios without reducing return potential.

Circumstances may arise necessitating a revision of the foregoing fee schedule. It is our continuing objective to maintain a schedule of fees which will consistently be fair and reasonable in relation to the responsibility assumed and the duties performed.

Minimum Asset Requirements

Officially our minimum account size for clients is $1,000,000, but we have multiple exceptions to this based on the fact that we have an unofficial agreement with clients that we will gladly help out immediate family members of any client that has the need for our investment management services. We will manage new family member accounts regardless of size, assuming we are confident that we have the time and resources to accept the additional account(s). We occasionally accept very small accounts for minors or other special purposes in order to assist clients in those areas of need. Overall, our acceptance of new client relationships—other than family members of existing clients—has been extremely limited over the past ten years and is likely to be even more so in the future. This is strictly due to the fact that we do not want to grow to be too big and unresponsive to client needs, and therefore our ability to serve existing clients precludes our ability to expand.

General Client Characteristics

The vast majority of Greylin Investment Management clients is individuals and couples who have a high net worth with investable assets of $1,000,000 or more. These clients tend to be middle aged or older, with investment objectives focused on growing their assets and future income streams without excessive risks and volatility. Many have accumulated assets over long time periods and want to be sure they are managed in a prudent fashion, but also want to see improvements in values over time while protecting their purchasing power.

Although most of our clients are individuals, we also manage accounts for retirement plans, trusts and estates, foundations, small businesses, and charitable or school accounts.

Methods of Investment Analysis

We do most of our research internally while relying on various sources of information. Our main sources of information come from company financial reports and 10-K statements, business and financial magazines and web sites, research services provided by others, and company presentations and press releases. We focus heavily on fundamental analysis of a company's financial performance over long time periods. We also focus on qualitative factors such as a company's product profile, market position, and management abilities. Industry analysis plays an important part in determining an investment's attractiveness in light of the outlook for an industry's growth, barriers to entry, pricing power and potential threats to those industry dynamics in future time periods. We utilize a variety of information sources to gather this information, but make it a practice to use our own independent thought process in evaluating the future potential for any investment in light of these factors and given the price of the investment.

Investment Strategies

Greylin Investment Management focuses on asset allocation for accounts since it has the greatest impact on future income, returns, volatility and risks. It is the most important factor in determining overall investment results. Given the greater returns that stocks offer compared to bonds and cash, we have a bias for greater stock weightings in portfolios—assuming client cash needs and risk parameters are carefully considered.

We tend to avoid “market timing” and remain almost full invested at all times. Although we tend to select fairly conservative stocks for investment, we do tend to emphasize stocks for their superior longer term returns. We occasionally will raise cash levels to meet expected distribution needs, but we never go to almost all cash in anticipation of large stock market declines. The track records of money managers who attempt to time market moves are spotty and inconsistent at best. Even if they are successful for a short period, longer term results are almost always disappointing.

We utilize a variety of investment styles and types of securities in order to lower risks and volatility while providing more balanced and consistent performance results over longer time periods. We focus particularly on a value analysis of any investment we make. This involves a fundamental evaluation of what we are getting in value given the current price of the investment. Many describe this approach as “value investing”. We would argue that all investing should be value investing. Determining a business’ value based on its characteristics and financial performance is critical to evaluating whether it is a good investment at the prevailing market price. We also buy growth stocks, but only if the current price is low enough to provide reasonable returns given the most probable growth expectations. We particularly like stocks which have a growing dividend stream because a bird in hand is worth two in the bush. However, we are happy to also buy non-dividend stocks if the price to value comparison is especially favorable.

We tend to emphasize the stocks of larger, more established companies with the following attributes:

- Leading market positions (preferably worldwide) in products or services which offer longer term growth potential. We prefer companies with more assured growth—even if the growth rates are lower, rather than less assured, high growth speculations.
- Capable management with an established track record of making decisions for the long term benefit of shareholders
- Solid financial profile which allows the company to weather difficult periods while still investing for longer term growth, taking advantage of opportunities, and increasing dividends over time

We attempt to limit excessive trading. Occasional trades make sense, but these moments are usually infrequent. If investment declines and the long-term outlook still remain promising, we would rather buy more rather than sell and search for a replacement investment with equally good or better prospects.

Our value approach to all investments means that we tend to be somewhat contrarian in our evaluation of investment opportunities. However, we would emphasize that being contrarian just to go against the prevalent market opinions is not a smart strategy unless you are right. We try to be right more than we are wrong. We therefore tend to buy bonds when interest rates and yields are high, we buy stocks when they are depressed and expectations are low, and we buy more defensive investments when these conditions are not in place.

Risks

Multiple risks are involved with most investment strategies and approaches. Our approach has several key risks for Greylin Investment Management clients:

- Clients are dependent on the investment analysis and decisions of one person: Greg Parkinson. There is no team of advisors with different perspectives and experience. Therefore, any error in his judgment can result in costly losses in portfolio values. We attempt to minimize the investment disappointments, but they still occur from time to time. On the flip side, the investment decision process is generally more consistent and decisions can be made quickly and implemented when opportunities appear. Any investments made are well understood by the person making them.
- Our strategy of remaining almost fully invested at all times can mean greater periods of volatility when market conditions change. Although we try to plan for anticipated and unanticipated events, this investment strategy can cause us to miss out on taking advantage of very attractive declines in certain investments due to a lack of investable funds. We still think longer term results will be better using this strategy rather than trying to guess the timing of market movements.
- Because we use a variety of investment styles, and because we tend to purchase larger, more established companies, our stocks may under perform the broad market indices during periods of rising stock prices. However, we also will tend to out perform market indices during stock market declines. In the long run, most of our clients seem to prefer this less volatile return pattern.
- Value stocks can remain cheap for a long time or even get cheaper before eventually recovering. The risks of buying a cheap stock too soon and waiting years for an improvement in value is a serious one. We attempt to look for catalysts likely to spur a change in value before purchasing, and higher dividend yields are often in place which help offset a stagnant stock price.
- All investments have risks of one kind or another. We attempt to fully explain those risks to clients and understand their concerns and needs in light of the risks involved when utilizing different investment securities.

Arrangements with Other Financial Industry Participants

Greylin Investment Management will on occasion recommend accountants or estate planning attorneys to clients who request recommendations in that area. We will offer suggestions based on our knowledge of reputable professionals in those or other related financial fields. However, we receive no financial or other benefit from such recommendations.

Conflicts of Interest

As a result, we see no conflicts of interest in making these recommendations of competent advisors in related financial and legal fields. We encourage feedback from clients regarding the quality of work performed and make recommendations only of firms which have done a superior job for clients in the past. Our only benefit is having a happy client who has been well served.

Description of Code of Ethics

Greylin Investment Management has a Code of Ethics which is available upon request. It outlines a strict code that requires all employees to comply with existing laws and regulations. It also outlines important issues on favoritism, insider trading, personal financial interests, trading and trade allocations. Employees are prohibited from participating in any Initial Public Offerings (IPOs) Private Placements, limited securities offerings, options or futures. Employees are limited in their outside activities and must disclose all personal investments and trading activities. When employees recommend or buy or sell securities for client accounts that they also may buy or sell for their own accounts, it is our practice that these trades be made only in large, highly-liquid securities, and that any transactions made are at or about the same time and at the same price.

All client information is strictly confidential and must be secured and protected.

Conflicts of Interest on Investment Recommendations

Occasionally, Greylin Investment Management will recommend investments for clients which are owned by Greylin Investment Management employees. These investments are large companies with a very active and liquid market where any trades made by Greylin Investment Management have little or no impact on stock prices. Trading in any less liquid securities owned by employees which would impact client account purchases or sales is prohibited.

Personal Trading and Conflicts of Interest

Greylin Investment Management employees are allowed to invest in the same securities that are recommended to clients. On occasion, these securities may be traded at or near the same time as those for clients. Again, the companies involved are large with extremely liquid markets where small trades involved have no real impact on the prices paid or received. Every effort is made to avoid conflicts of interest where trades being made by employees would have any impact on the prices paid or received by clients.

Brokerage Selection

Clients may select any broker they desire to custody their assets, as Greylin Investment Management does not hold any client assets. We urge clients to consider using the custody services of Charles Schwab & Co Institutional. We have found they do a good job as custodian, offer a wide selection of investment choices, have state of the art internet and web site capabilities, and have very reasonable fees and commissions compared to most other well established custodians.

Soft Dollar Practices

Greylin Investment Management has a firm policy to pay directly for research and financial information used in analyzing investment opportunities. Therefore, we do not have any “soft dollar” arrangements with any firms. Through our association with Charles Schwab Institutional, we do receive computer downloads of client account activities and positions as well as tax related reports. We also utilize Schwab’s trading platform and related services. These are services that Schwab provides without fees or any required business commitments from Greylin Investment Management. Greylin Investment Management benefits from the consistency and ease of operating on the Schwab systems for almost all of our accounts, but Greylin Investment Management continues to monitor other custodial alternatives and still is confident that Schwab’s total service package is one of the best available for clients. Any client is free to use another broker or custodian that they might desire for trading and custodial services.

Client Referrals

Greylin Investment Management has no client referral arrangements with any other firm or entity. We typically have grown our client base through the referrals of exiting clients who have been satisfied with our investment management services.

Directed Brokerage

Greylin Investment Management has occasionally had clients who were interested in directing the trades in their accounts to a specific broker for execution. Although we will accommodate these requests, we make it a point to let the client know that these arrangements often are more costly in terms of trading costs for them and may result in less favorable trade execution in their accounts.

Trade Aggregation

Occasionally, when large amounts of a stock are being bought or sold, or when investment market or individual investment security prices are likely to be volatile, Greylin Investment Management will bunch the trades within its master account and then allocate those trades to the respective client sub-accounts for which they were bought or sold. This procedure is done in such a manner to ensure fairness, in that the average price received is the same for all accounts.

- * All aggregated trades are the summation of individual account trades which are developed after a thorough review of each account's investment objectives, diversification, tax considerations, cash levels, and other client preferences.

- * No client or account is favored over any other in connection with participation in such aggregated orders.

- * Each client that participates in the order does so at the average price for all transactions and based on their individual commission for the trade done in their account.

- * An aggregated order list is used to enter and allocate these trades based on the number of shares for each account involved.

- * Greylin Investment Management does not benefit financially from aggregating orders. The purpose of doing so is to insure a fairer and more uniform price for all accounts than would be available by not aggregating certain orders.

- * Commission rates for aggregated orders are the same as they would be if the trades had been made separately in each individual account.

- * All allocations are made promptly on the day in which the trade is executed.

Examination of Client Accounts

Client accounts shall be reviewed at least monthly, on a portfolio analysis basis. In addition, cash levels shall be reviewed each day by Mr. Parkinson to ensure that no irregularities or abuses have occurred. At that time Mr. Parkinson reviews the transactions from the previous day's business to ensure that all transactions occurred in the proper accounts and were filled as requested.

Additional client account reviews may occur periodically depending upon:

- Economic and investment market events
- Decisions to reduce holdings in particular securities based upon company events or investment research and analysis.
- Decisions to add positions in particular securities based upon company events or investment research and analysis.
- Decisions to adjust portfolios based upon risk levels, tax issues, or income and disbursement requirements.
- Client communication indicating the desire to make certain changes, or the alteration of investment objectives and goals.

Compensation for Client Referrals

Greylin Investment Management has no agreements to compensate any individual or firm for client referrals. Historically we have obtained most of our clients as a result of referrals from other clients who are pleased with our investment management services.

New Client Additions

Each new client account shall have the proper paperwork completed as required by the custodian. Once accuracy and completeness has been verified, it is faxed to the custodian for account opening. Once the custodian provides an account number, the operations manager will note that number on each copy of the application, retain one for Greylin Investment Management's records, and forward the other to the client for their records.

In addition to the custodian's required paperwork, all new Greylin Investment Management clients are provided with a Greylin Investment Management Brochure and Brochure Supplement, Scope of Greylin Investment Management Services, Basic Investment Principles, a recent "Investment Update", appropriate fee schedule(s), Privacy Policy, and Proxy Voting Policies if applicable. They also are requested to read and complete Greylin Investment Management's Disclosure Statement and Investment Advisory Agreement. A copy of all signed documents is provided to the client for their records, and the originals of these are kept in their Greylin Investment Management files.

At such time as the account has been established at the custodian's office, the operations manager will then ensure that the account is properly set up on Greylin Investment Management's portfolio management software.

Custodian Account Statements

The custodian for each account managed by Greylin Investment Management sends monthly or quarterly statements to the client outlining all assets, income, withdrawals, fees, and other activities that occurred in the account during the respective time period.

Greylin Investment Management Account Statements

Greylin Investment Management sends all clients a quarterly investment report. Our reports show cost and market information regarding security values, estimated annual income, quarterly and historical performance results compared to pertinent stock, bond or other indices, tax-related information, and other pertinent information which the client might need or desire from time to time.

Comparing Statements for Fees and Activities

All quarterly reports that are sent out to Greylin Investment Management clients have the following message on the cover page that is sent with those reports:

“Clients are encouraged to review all statements from both Greylin Investment Management and the custodian of client assets in order to detect any discrepancies and to monitor any trade activities as well as the proper accounting for account distributions, including fees and expenses.”

Discretionary Authority

Greylin Investment Management has discretionary authority over all of the accounts and assets under its management. This allows Greylin Investment Management to make trades and conduct other activities associated with the investment management aspects of those accounts.

Limitations to Discretionary Authority

Certain limitations are in place on the activities that Greylin Investment Management is allowed to perform because Greylin Investment Management has only a Limited Power of Attorney for accounts. Any withdrawals from the account (other than for fees) are allowed to go only to the account holder's address of record or other accounts owned by and approved by the account holder. Distributions to any third parties must be specifically approved in writing by the account holder before hand.

Greylin Investment Management's degree of investment authority is fairly complete, but we make it an established practice at the beginning of each new account relationship to discuss any investment recommendations and changes to be made with clients before making those changes. Over time as the client becomes more comfortable with our investment approach and procedures, they will often indicate that there is no need to continue to discuss every investment decision being made. All clients receive either paper or electronic confirms for all trades in their account, and if they have any questions or comments, we welcome the input and appreciate their guidance on what they like or have concerns about.

We have clients across the spectrum in terms of how involved or uninvolved they would like to be in the investment management process and in making specific investment decisions. Most would prefer to establish overall guidelines, objectives and expectations and let Greylin Investment Management implement the discussed programs to reach those goals without constant communication needed. Others want to discuss each and every change before hand, and understand the intricacies of each investment decision. We are happy to accommodate each client with as much or as little communication and participation in the investment management process that they desire.

Client Election on Voting Securities

Greylin Investment Management routinely votes proxies and reorganization issues for clients. In doing so, guidelines are followed that are deemed to be prudent and in the long term economic best interest of Greylin Investment Management clients and their investments.

Greylin Investment Management's responsibility for voting any particular client's proxy or reorganization issue is clearly defined in the account application paperwork when the account is initially established. Any accounts which vote their own proxies are noted by the custodian so that proxies are mailed directly to them.

The voting of all proxies and reorganization issues are the responsibility of Mr. Parkinson, and the following policies are designed to ensure flexibility for the management of businesses owned, while providing reasonable controls and protections of clients' best interests and economic well being.

Proxy and Reorganization Voting Policies and Procedures

Client Direction on Particular Votes

Greylin Investment Management has the capability to direct an individual's particular vote if that client has opinions on any issue, reorganization, or merger which differ from our state policies or planned voting intentions on a certain issue. We accommodate those requests on a case-by-case basis.

Conflicts of Interest

Although we do not anticipate or expect any conflicts of interest on these voting issues, all potential conflicts would be resolved by following these steps to make sure the clients' best interests are paramount in any conflict of interest:

- 1) All proxies and reorganization issues are voted according to the written policies and procedures stated herein. There are no exceptions unless the client(s) specifically request that their shares be voted in a manner that differs from stated policy.
- 2) If a conflict of interest on an issue not covered by policy is encountered, Greylin Investment Management will rely on the recommendation or findings of an independent proxy voting service (such as Institutional Shareholder Services) to guide their voting decisions.

Records of Historical Voting

All historical proxy and reorganization votes are recorded and kept by calendar year. These records are maintained for the benefit of those clients who make a request to see how we have voted their shares on their behalf.

Financial Information

Greylin Investment Management does not have any financial condition or issues which would be likely to impair our ability to meet contractual commitments to clients and our discretionary authority over client assets.
