We must provide you with sufficient explanation of the minimum qualifications required for this designation to allow you to understand the value of the designation.

The Chartered Investment Counselor (CIC) charter is a professional designation established in 1975 and awarded by the Investment Adviser Association (IAA). The CIC charter was designed to recognize the special qualifications of persons employed by IAA member firms whose primary duties involve investment counseling and portfolio management. When Mr. Schlindwein received the designation in 1976, candidates were required to pass an examination similar to the third level of the CFA program (described in the footnote below) which focuses on portfolio management and have relevant work experience.¹

¹ Currently, a key educational component of the CIC program is the requirement that candidates hold the Chartered Financial Analyst® designation, administered by CFA Institute. To earn the CFA designation, candidates must, among other things, pass three sequential, six-hour examinations (or levels) over two to four years, which test a wide range of investment topics, including ethical and professional standards, fixed-income analysis, alternative and derivative investments, and portfolio management and wealth planning. When he received the designation, Mr. Schlindwein was not required to, and does not, hold the CFA designation. The CIC designation also currently requires candidates to demonstrate significant experience (at least five cumulative years) in a position performing investment counseling and portfolio management responsibilities. Current standards require that, at the time the CIC charter is awarded, candidates be employed by an IAA member firm in such a position, provide work and character references, endorse the IAA's Standards of Practice, and provide professional ethical information.
