Advisory Business

Canaras Capital Management LLC and Saranac CLO Management, LLC (together, “Canaras”) provides investment advice and/or investment management services to institutional investors, generally, and, more specifically, it provides those services to private investment funds and securitized asset funds such as CDOs/CLOs. None of its clients (as of the date of this brochure) is an individual. With respect to the services Canaras provides, they are mostly related to debt and fixed income instruments of various types – leveraged loans and bonds, for example.

Canaras provides discretionary investment management and, under certain condition, non-discretionary investment management services. The portfolios of its clients are usually in the millions, tens of millions or hundreds of millions of dollars. However, there is no set, pre-established minimum amount of assets for the provision of services. All of the investment personnel at Canaras have appropriate degrees in finance, portfolio management or related disciplines. A number of our investment professionals have MBAs from well-known business schools and/or equivalent credentials. Canaras expects to require similar qualifications of anyone who joins the portfolio management or credit analysis team. Currently, Canaras manages approximately $1.2 Billion of client assets, all on a discretionary basis (as of December 31, 2016).

Fees & Other Compensation

Fees are charged in various ways, depending upon the engagement. Currently, Canaras charges fees that are (i) a percentage of the fee earned by the primary manager in any sub-advisory arrangement. So far, such fees range from 5% to 20% of such manager's fees. Outside of such sub-advisory arrangements, Canaras may charge fees that are (ii) a percentage of assets under management in the client portfolio (and/or the notional assets associated with a client portfolio, if applicable), (iii) a percentage of the positive return in a client portfolio over an agreed upon period of time and pursuant to agreed upon terms and conditions (such as a high water mark or hurdle, but neither necessarily these, nor necessarily limited to these), or (iv) a combination of these. Fees are negotiated within the ranges indicated in the chart (below).

Canaras also reserves the right to charge clients for certain expenses incurred on behalf of clients which expenses were not contemplated in the relevant investment management or advisory agreements, where otherwise permissible. Where Canaras may charge fees in advance with respect to any client, and where the investment management or advisory agreement between Canaras and such client is terminated prior to Canaras earning the pre-paid fees, the client will be entitled to receive a pro-rata refund of such pre-paid fees within a reasonable period of time after the termination of the investment management or advisory agreement between the Canaras and that client.

Neither Canaras nor any of its employees receive transaction based fees or compensation (such as commissions).

Fees are generally calculated and billed to the client, via its trustee or custodian, on a monthly or quarterly basis.

Type of Fee	General Range
Asset-Based	1% to 3%
Performance	20% to 35% of gain
Sub-Advisory	5% to 20% of Advisory Fee
Other	Expenses directly incurred on client's behalf
Transaction-Based	None

Actual fees may vary based upon negotiations and needs of prospective clients

Performance-based Fees and Side-by-Side Management

Performance-based fees will vary depending upon the engagement. The typical range of performance based fees is 20% to 35%. Not all client accounts will be charged a performance fee. Performance fees can create certain conflicts of interest for Canaras or any other adviser, such as, for example, in making decisions to allocate assets across client accounts. For example, since an adviser will seek to meet the performance hurdles before it can receive a performance fee from a client that has contracted to pay a performance fee, it may be tempted to allocate assets across client accounts such that the probability of meeting the hurdle will be maximized. This could be at the expense of the client accounts that do not pay performance fees. Canaras mitigates this potential conflict by requiring allocation, in most cases, at the time that a block trade is effected (although not all trades are in fact allocated across client accounts). In summary, the above and other inducements to favor one client over another are known, and, as fiduciaries, we take all prudent precautions against such favoritism. See "Conflicts of Interest," below.

Types of Clients

As stated above, Canaras provides investment advice and/or investment management services to private investment funds such as CDOs/CLOs. None of its current clients is an individual. With respect to the services it provides, they are mostly related to debt and fixed income instruments of various types – leveraged loans and bonds, for example.

Methods of Analysis, Investment Strategies and Risk of Loss

The firm uses quantitative and fundamental analysis in selecting portfolio holdings. These include extensive credit analysis. Portfolio positions are constantly assessed for risk of non-performance or underperformance, and are replaced or hedged if risk concerns are too great. A client's governing documents may require limitations on risk exposure, and may require investments that meet or exceed certain risk standards or metrics. Canaras seeks to mitigate portfolio losses. The portfolio management and credit team analyze issuer (company or borrower) financials, plans, public filings related to the company and its industry competitors, capital position and many other variables, and uses normal professional standards of risk analysis.

Expectations of loss in any portfolio position should correlate to the rating assigned to the credit (if rated). In certain cases, certain company-borrowers may enter into bankruptcy, despite the credit rating assigned, but this should be rare with respect to the types of credits that would ordinarily be represented in a client portfolio. However, the level of risk is, in part, dictated by the type of institutional client with which Canaras has a management agreement. Should certain funds be more aggressive, seeking higher returns and, thereby, higher risks, the probability of loss will increase. Long-term risks associated with climate change have become the subject of discussion, especially regarding companies in certain industries. While substantial risks to portfolio holdings may remain low, we will continue to review portfolio holdings in view of climate change risks.

Disciplinary Information

Canaras is registered with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission (the "Commission") as an investment adviser. Canaras has no disciplinary record with the Commission or with any other regulatory authority, domestic or foreign.

Other Financial Industry Activities and Affiliations

Canaras's only business is investment advisory/investment management services. It maintains sub-advisory contracts with Canaras Management Limited and Saranac Advisory Limited and affiliates located in Jersey, Channel Islands. Canaras Management Limited and Saranac Advisory Limited are the collateral managers of certain collateralized loan obligation companies.

Code of Ethics, Participation or Interest in Client Transactions and Personal Trading

Canaras has a code of ethics. The general purpose of its code of ethics is to foster high principles of commercial honor and just and equitable principles of trade. The code of ethics covers investment related matters as well as non-investment related matters, requires that the firm have an Ethics Officer, requires that there be an ethics committee, and establishes procedures for handling ethics related concerns or matters. It also contains provisions for the handling of personal trading by the firm's officers and employees. Canaras has not entered into any soft dollar arrangements. Canaras has not engaged any person to provide it with client referrals, for a fee, but it may do so in the future. Canaras is not a part of any directed brokerage arrangements. Canaras may, acting as principal, participate in client transactions but it has not done so to date and there are no plans to do so presently. (Also, see "Conflicts of Interest," below.)

Brokerage Practices

Canaras has discretion to select broker-dealers to effect client account transactions. In selecting broker-dealers, it will take into consideration the broker-dealers' general ability to execute transactions in a timely manner; their experience with the asset class or types of securities relevant to the transaction; the reasonableness of fees and commissions; and the availability of quality analytical materials, including research. Within the bounds of Canaras's duty to provide "best execution" for its client accounts, Canaras may cause the accounts to pay higher fees or commissions than might be available through other broker-dealers. Canaras will take into account a combination of qualitative and quantitative factors in determining which broker-dealers to use for client account transactions, including commission cost, the availability of research, responsiveness of the broker-dealer, willingness to assume principal risk, and other qualitative factors as discussed above. Research obtained by directing certain transactions to certain broker-dealers will be used for all clients and all clients will therefore benefit from such research, all else being equal. Presently, Canaras has not entered into any soft dollar or directed brokerage arrangements with any broker-dealer, but may enter into such arrangements in the future. Generally, such arrangements will be consistent with the safe harbor provisions of Section 28(e) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, unless arrangements outside of Section 28(e) are required and consistent with the policies and objectives of certain hedge funds or other institutional clients advised/managed by Canaras, consistent with Canaras's fiduciary duties under the various securities laws.

Certain prime brokers to certain hedge funds (or other pooled investment vehicles) expected to be sponsored by Canaras (or by an affiliate) may pay or provide reimbursement for certain investment management related expenses incurred (e.g., investment research, investment data service providers, on-line quotation services, and news and research services). This practice will or may benefit Canaras since the clients will not need to pay for such products and services out of their own resources and since Canaras will not need to provide for those services out of its own resources. This practice may be a factor in such clients' selection of brokers and prime brokers.

Canaras's brokerage practices on behalf of its clients may be modified based upon the governing documents of certain clients.

Reviews of Accounts

Client portfolios are reviewed regularly, and usually weekly. The Chief Investment Officer is responsible for such reviews, which he may delegate to other qualified investment personnel. The firm has an Investment Committee. During the course of each week the Investment Committee will monitor financial, operational and risk factors that are or may be relevant to the respective client portfolios. The Investment Committee will meet from time to time to discuss client portfolios, strategies, macroeconomic conditions, brokerage arrangements and other relevant matters. The Investment Committee will meet in the event of unusual or extraordinary macroeconomic, market, or political news that may reasonably be expected to affect client portfolios.

Generally, the firm provides reports to clients no less frequently than monthly (which includes providing reports to client boards or members thereof). These reports may communicate strategic and portfolio analysis and other information, and may include retrospective commentary concerning the previous trading month with discussion of those factors believed to have been relevant to a client's account performance. The firm may provide more or less frequent reports to certain clients as and if mutually agreed or requested, or pursuant to the requirements of an extant management agreement calling for more or less frequent reports.

Client Referrals and Other Compensation

Canaras has not engaged any person to provide it with client referrals, but it may do so in the future. Canaras may earn other compensation from clients for providing services other than advisory or investment management services.

Custody

Canaras does not intend to maintain physical custody of client assets. Physical custody of client assets is the responsibility of qualified custodian banks, trust companies, and broker-dealers, as appropriate. However, Canaras, in its role as general partner or managing member for certain sponsored funds, may have constructed custody in virtue of the authority of such status. This does not mean, however, that Canaras itself holds cash or securities in any literal sense. Always, qualified custodian banks, trust companies or broker-dealers will have physical custody. Where there is constructed custody, the custodian will send statements directly to clients, unless otherwise required. Clients should compare these statements with any statements delivered to them by Canaras or any Canaras affiliate or agent.

Investment Discretion

In many cases, Canaras will have full investment discretion over client accounts, i.e. it will make investment decisions without first consulting clients. This includes the ability to select brokers for the execution of portfolio trades. Investment discretion is granted pursuant to a written investment advisory agreement that grants to Canaras such discretion. In some cases, Canaras will not have investment discretion, but this will be rare, generally (for example, when Canaras is acting as an adviser only). Investment discretion does not give Canaras authority to withdraw money or securities from any client account, other than to settle client trades or pay client expenses related to Canaras's mandate.

Voting Client Securities

As part of Canaras's management obligations, it may be required to vote proxies on equity securities held in client portfolios. In accordance with applicable law, we have prepared procedures to govern how such proxies are voted. The procedures require that a reasonable decision be made regarding a vote on any matters recommended by issuer management or concerning any issuer shareholder proposals. The procedures require that if we determine not to vote, the firm must have a reasonable basis for withholding its vote. The policies and procedures address the handling of conflicts of interest that may arise in the voting of proxies. The firm's vote on any matter regarding any issuer's equity securities will be recorded and kept on file. Clients may request to see how the firm voted any proxy, and obtain an explanation as to why it voted as it did. Requests for an explanation of votes, or for a copy of the policies and procedures, should be sent to the address listed above. (Given the fixed-income focus of the firm's client mandates, the need to vote proxies will be rare.)

Conflicts of Interest

Canaras may effect principal transactions with clients in accordance with the constraints imposed on it under documents that govern client accounts (such as offering memoranda, management agreements, indentures or other documents) and pursuant to the requirements of the Advisers Act. Such transactions (if any) will be rare.

At times Canaras, its affiliates, or employees (hereinafter with respect to this Item, "Traders") may purchase or sell for their own accounts the same issue or class of securities that are being purchased or sold for client accounts. Further, Traders may employ investment strategies for client accounts that differ from the investment strategies they employ for their own accounts. In connection therewith, Traders may at times buy the same issue or class of security that is being sold from client accounts, or sell the same issue or class of security that is being purchased for client accounts. Such disparities in direction will likely, inter alia, reflect a difference between the Traders' investment objectives, policies, risk tolerances, and investment limitations and those of clients. Nevertheless, these activities may create a conflict of interest in respect of client accounts. Canaras intends to mitigate such conflicts of interest by following policies and procedures (such as its code of ethics and compliance policies and procedures) as it has created to determine whether such proprietary purchases and sales by Traders do or may violate Canaras's fiduciary obligations to clients, or in any material manner undermine the clients' interests. Canaras has adopted a code of ethics which requires a high degree of internal transparency with respect to proprietary and personal transactions so that potential conflicts of interest may be addressed. The code of ethics and other policy documentation require employees of Canaras to report to the Chief Compliance Officer (or his or her designee) securities and commodities transactions in which they have a beneficial interest. The code of ethics also precludes certain types of transaction without prior approval.

Canaras or its affiliates may at times purchase or sell blocks of securities, part of which will be allocated to client accounts and part to their own accounts. Where there are such block trades, Canaras will generally determine in advance that portion that will be allocated to its own or an affiliate's account and that portion that will be allocated among client accounts. As indicated above, a similar advance determination will be made when the block will be allocated only among client accounts. This advance determination will usually be recorded in an appropriate trade memorandum or similar record (which may be in electronic form). Sometimes it may not be possible to allocate in accordance with such advance determination because of bona fide client or portfolio considerations. Canaras will record the reason for amending such advance allocation determination in an internal memorandum. Further, at certain times Canaras will only allocate after a substantial amount of time has elapsed since effecting the block order. This may happen from time to time in rapidly moving markets in which Canaras must make a quick decision to buy or sell without time for prior allocation decisions. In such circumstances, allocations will be made in accordance with bona fide client portfolio considerations, including any investment restrictions or limitations. Further, the advance determination requirement pertains to orders other than block or bunched orders. It is Canaras's policy that all allocations will be made in a fair and equitable manner over time. Where settlement issues arise (for example, concerning loan or loan participations), trades may be reallocated at a period of time significantly beyond the trade date, informing all affected parties and, to the extent deemed necessary, obtain consent.

Canaras, a Trader, or an affiliate may hold securities for longer or shorter periods of time than in client accounts for which Canaras is exercising discretion over such accounts. Generally, this will have to do with the differing objectives between Canaras's various client accounts and its or an affiliate's accounts. At times Canaras may purchase for its own account or the account of affiliates securities that it is not also purchasing for client accounts (this is also the case with sales of securities). Generally, this has to do with the differing investment objectives, policies and investment restrictions imposed (explicitly or by agreement, or both) by the various accounts. Further, Canaras may employ investment strategies for client accounts that differ from the investment strategies it employs for its own or affiliates' accounts (and the same is true of such affiliates). Again, this is due, generally, to differing investment objectives, policies, restrictions and strategies.

Financial Information/Condition

Canaras is solvent and is not in a "precarious financial condition" (as that phrased is defined by Canaras's regulator, the SEC). The firm does not receive fees six months or more in advance of services, and would therefore not be liable for the reimbursement of such fees upon termination of an investment advisory or management agreement that called for such advance pre-payment of fees.

Other Information About Canaras—Certain Senior Officers and Investment Professionals

As mentioned, all of the investment personnel have appropriate degrees in finance, portfolio management or related disciplines. Most of the firm's investment professionals have degrees in business, economics, or finance, or have MBAs from well-known business schools and/or hold the designation "Chartered Financial Analyst" (or "CFA"). Canaras expects to require similar qualifications of anyone who joins the portfolio management or credit analyst team.
