Item 8. Methods of Analysis, Investment Strategies and Risk of Loss

Investing in securities involves risk of loss that investors should be prepared to bear such loss.

Methods of Analysis, Investment Strategies

The Belstar Credit Opportunities Fund Ltd. was formed to take advantage of the market dislocations deriving from the European sovereign credit crisis to generate attractive returns. The investment objective is to make credit investments in securities, loans/debt and derivative contracts in strategies that extract value from different markets and different types of borrowers who have been impacted. Investments are focused on providing liquidity to support fundamentally sound borrowers whose access to or cost of funds from traditional sources has been negatively affected directly or indirectly as European and other lenders have stepped back from the credit markets.

The Fund invests in (i) investment grade and non-investment grade debt including single-issuer obligations as well as CLOs and CDO tranches; and (ii) unrated corporate loans, including participations in structured loan facilities related to trade and other asset secured finance. The Fund may use both cash and derivative contracts to gain exposure to its targeted asset classes. There can be no assurance that the investment objective of the Fund will be achieved.

The investment programs of the Fund are speculative and entail substantial risks. Since market risks are inherent in all investments to varying degrees, there can be no assurance that the investment objective of the investment vehicles will be achieved or that the investment vehicles will be profitable, and certain investment practices employed by the Investment Manager can, in some circumstances, increase any adverse impact on the investment portfolio.

Risk of Loss

All investments in securities and loans include a risk of loss of principal (invested amount) and loss of any profits that have not been realized (the securities and loans were not sold to “lock in” the profit). Stock markets, bond markets, and the securities and debt markets in general, fluctuate substantially over time. In addition, positive performance of any investment is not guaranteed. As a result, there is a risk of loss to the assets that is not in our control.
