From: Shareholder Rights Group

As of July 16, 2026, the attached petitions contain nearly 32,000 signatures collected nationwide. These petitions urge the SEC to defend and retain Rule 14a-8.

Shareholder proposals have been a key driver of improved disclosure and risk oversight for nearly 85 years. In that time, shareholder proposals have been a vital mechanism for positive change. Any changes to this critical rule that would significantly limit, restrict access, or even eliminate investors' ability to file proposals would be harmful to the capital markets and the investors who rely on the opportunity to file and vote upon proposals.

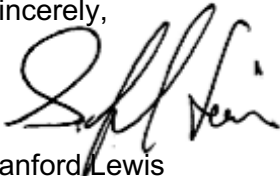

That is why Shareholder Rights Group along with Inequality Media and Civic Action, Green America, Public Citizen, Friends of the Earth, Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, US/SIF, Freedom to Invest, For the Long-Term and Americans for Financial Reform launched these petitions. These organizations saw an overwhelming response from their members in defense of shareholder rights.

Duplicate submissions were removed to the best of our ability on the separate petitions. The petitions were live and collecting signatures from 4/24/26 - 7/16/26.

Signatories include retirees, pension beneficiaries, and individual and institutional investors, and others concerned about the integrity of America's capital markets.

The petition language from the two distinct petitions is copied below. The signatory lists are attached as two excel files labeled Americans for Financial Reform and Defend Shareholder Rights.

Sincerely,

Dear Chairman Atkins and Commissioners Peirce and Uyeda,
We write as retirees, pension beneficiaries, and individual and institutional investors whose savings depend on the integrity of America's capital markets. We urge you to preserve the shareholder proposal rule as a cornerstone of property rights and free-market accountability.

Shareholder proposals are an expression of ownership. For eighty years, the ability of shareholders to raise questions before the companies they own has been one of the most effective free market-based checks on corporate mismanagement. The need for regulators to intervene is reduced when owners can speak directly. That is the genius of the system — and precisely what is at risk.

Shareholders have advanced sound governance of their companies through decades of governance reforms, adopted first through the shareholder proposal process and then as general market practice.

When investors ask a clothing retailer to account for supply chain vulnerabilities, they are protecting brand equity and long-term profitability. When they ask a pharmaceutical company to address legislative risk embedded in its earnings guidance, they are doing the analytical work that sound investing requires. When they flag water scarcity exposure for agricultural, beverage, semiconductor, or mining companies, they are surfacing risks that conventional financial filings routinely omit — risks that eventually become losses borne by ordinary shareholders.

Other investors have a right to inquire whether environmental or social commitments of a company are undercutting shorter term profitability. Regardless of the time horizons of investing, this is a critical right of investors to engage a fundamental American value — the marketplace of ideas.

If the shareholder proposal process is curtailed, the practical result is not quieter markets. It is a transfer of power: away from diverse owners, and toward a narrow class of the largest institutional players. Smaller investors — retirees, pension funds, individual savers — will lose one of the only shareholder protection tools scaled to their resources. Blind spots will accumulate. Risks that could have been surfaced early will compound, spreading across companies and sectors until they become systemic.

The boards and executives of public companies should answer to their owners. That principle is not progressive or conservative — it is foundational to capitalism.

We urge the Commission to honor its mandate to protect investors and maintain fair, efficient markets by keeping this rule intact.

Let America's public companies be guided by their shareholders — not shielded from them.

To: Securities and Exchange Commission

Dear Chairman Atkins and Commissioners Peirce and Uyeda,

We write on behalf of workers, retirees, pension beneficiaries, consumers, and communities who deserve a financial system that serves the public good rather than concentrating power in the hands of wealthy insiders. We urge you to preserve the shareholder proposal rule as a critical tool that allows shareholders to hold corporate management accountable and challenge the growing concentration of corporate power in our economy. The SEC should protect investors and fair markets — not help consolidate power in the hands of billionaire oligarchs, corporate executives, and other insiders.

For eighty years, the ability of shareholders to raise questions before the companies they own has been one of the most effective ways for regular shareholders — including workers' pensions, responsible asset managers, and small investors — to weigh in on corporate decision-making. That is precisely why these rights are under attack. Weakening the proposal process would silence investors on workers' rights, climate risk, racial equity, political spending, executive pay, and other issues that affect companies and the broader economy.

When investors ask a clothing retailer to account for supply chain vulnerabilities, they are protecting brand equity and long-term profitability. When they ask a pharmaceutical company to address legislative risk embedded in its earnings guidance, they are doing the analytical work that sound investing requires. When they flag water scarcity exposure for agricultural, beverage, semiconductor, or mining companies, they are surfacing risks that conventional financial filings routinely omit — risks that eventually become losses borne by ordinary shareholders. When they ask for accountability from management for not respecting workers' freedom of association, they are pushing companies to address risks that come from a low-morale, high-turnover workforce.

Corporate management should not get to decide which investor concerns are acceptable and which are too inconvenient to appear on a ballot. Whether shareholders are raising concerns about climate risk, labor standards, political spending, racial equity, executive compensation, or corporate misconduct, the point is the same: investors need meaningful tools to challenge insiders and protect the long-term value of the companies they own.

If the shareholder proposal process is curtailed, the practical result would be a transfer of power: away from workers' pensions, small shareholders, and the broader investing public — and toward corporate insiders and a small circle of wealthy and powerful actors. Blind spots will accumulate. Risks that could have been surfaced early will compound, spreading across companies and sectors until they become systemic.

The boards and executives of public companies should answer to regular shareholders instead of being insulated from their input and accountability. That principle is essential for investor protection and fair markets that serve everyone — not just a powerful few.
