Item 8. Methods of Analysis, Investment Strategies and Risk of Loss

A. Methods of Analysis and Investment Strategies

Fundamental analysis involves the analysis of financial statements, the general financial health of companies, and/or the analysis of management or competitive advantages. Fundamental analysis concentrates on factors that determine a company's value and expected future earnings. This strategy would normally encourage equity purchases in stocks that are undervalued or priced below their perceived value. The risk assumed is that the market will fail to reach expectations of perceived value.

Quantitative analysis deals with measurable factors as distinguished from qualitative considerations such as the character of management or the state of employee morale, such as the value of assets, the cost of capital, historical projections of sales, and so on. Quantitative analysis. Investment strategies using quantitative models may perform differently than expected as a result of, among other things, the factors used in the models, the weight placed on each factor, changes from the factors' historical trends, and technical issues in the construction and implementation of the models.

1. Investment Strategies

Based on the scope of the engagement and each client's needs, RHB manages accounts utilizing model portfolios and by building customized portfolios. RHB's Model portfolios hold exchange traded funds ("ETF's"), equities, bonds, mutual funds and separate accounts. As part of the process RHB performs security selection based on fundamental analysis, quantitative analysis, statistical analysis and modern portfolio theory. As part of the portfolio construction process RHB develops an asset allocation strategy for each portfolio. Through its relationship with Alta Trust, RHB serves as a sub-adviser to the RH Buchanan Collective Investment Funds (each a "Fund" and together the "Funds") for certain accounts. These funds are structured based on risk-based strategies and are available through Alta Trust. Alta Trust is responsible for the calculation of investment performance and fees. Additional information, including investment disclosure, fee schedules and performance information is available at Alta Trusts website

2. Material Risks Involved

RHB utilizes U.S. listed equities, US. Fixed Income, International Equity, International Fixed Income, Exchange Traded Funds, Collective Funds and Mutual funds for its client accounts and funds. Each client account is subject to market risk, meaning that the value of the investments in the account may decline over time causing a reduction in the value of the client account.

3. Specific Types of Risk

Management Risk: RHB's dependence on its process and judgments about the attractiveness, value and potential appreciation of particular stocks in which the Client or the Funds invest or write may prove to be incorrect and may not produce the desired results.

Market Risk: Overall securities market risks will affect the value of individual investments. Factors such as economic growth and market conditions, interest rate levels, and political events affect the U.S. securities markets. When the value of an investment goes down, an investment decreases in value. Stock markets tend to move in cycles, with periods of rising stock prices and periods of falling stock prices.

Limited History of Operations: The RH Buchanan Collective Investment Trust and its associated Funds are a new offering and there is a limited history of operations for investors to evaluate.

Expense Risk: Prior to making an investment in a Fund, investors should carefully consider the expenses and how those expenses may reduce overall investment performance. Further, prior to engaging RHB as an Investment Manager, investors should carefully consider the fees charged by RHB and how those expenses may reduce overall investment performance.

ETF Risk: ETFs are subject to investment advisory and other expenses, which will be indirectly paid by the investor. As a result, the cost of investing in a Collective Investment Fund which utilizes ETFs will be higher than the cost of investing directly in an ETF and may be higher than other mutual funds that invest directly in stocks. ETFs are subject to specific risks, depending on the nature of the Fund.

Mutual Fund Risk: Mutual Funds are subject to investment advisory and other expenses, which will be indirectly paid by the investor. As a result, the cost of investing in a Collective Investment Fund will be higher than the cost of investing directly in a mutual fund and may be higher than other mutual funds that invest directly in stocks. Mutual Funds are subject to specific risks, depending on the nature of the fund.

Objective Risk: There is no guarantee that a client account or a Fund will reach its stated objective.

Trading Risk: Investment strategies involve trading of securities and include; long term purchases (securities held at least one year); short term purchases (securities sold within one year); trading securities (securities sold within 30 days).

Liquidity Risk: Due to a lack of demand in the marketplace of other factors, an account may not be able to sell some or all of the investments promptly, or may only be able to sell investments at less than desired prices.

Tax, Legal and Regulatory Risks: The risk of loss due to increased costs and reduced investment and trading opportunities as a result of legal, tax and regulatory changes.

Asset Allocation and Rebalancing Risks: The risk that a portfolio may be out of balance with the Client's investment guidelines. Any rebalancing of such assets by RHB may be limited by several factors and, even if achieved, may have an adverse effect on the performance of the Client portfolio.

Credit Risk: If fixed income or debt obligations held by an account are downgraded by ratings agencies, go into default, or if due to management action, legislation, government action or any other factor reduces the issuers' ability to pay principal and interest when due, the obligations' value may decline, and an account's value may be reduced. Political, economic and other factors also may adversely affect sovereign credits.

Interest Rate Risk: When interest rates increase, the value of the account's investments may decline, and the account's share value may decrease. This effect is typically more pronounced for intermediate and longer-term obligations. This effect is also typically more pronounced for mortgage and other asset-backed securities, since value may fluctuate more significantly in response to interest rate changes.

Tax Risk: The risk that the current tax treatment of the securities invested in a Client portfolio could change in a manner that would have adverse consequences for existing investors.

Environmental Risk: The risk of loss as a result of statutes, rules and regulations relating to environmental protection negatively impacting the business of the issuers.

Limited Liquidity Risk: The risk that a secondary market trade will be executed at a level below the most recent statement value due to limited liquidity, or if a secondary market trade cannot be executed due to illiquidity that the Product may have to be held until maturity.

Idiosyncratic Risk: The value of an investment may decline in response to developments affecting the specific issuer of the security or obligation, even if the overall industry, sector or economy is unaffected. These developments may comprise a variety of factors, including but not limited to management issues or corporate disruption, a decline in revenues or profitability, an increase in costs or an adverse effect on the issuer's competitive position.

This summary of methods and principal investment strategies is necessarily limited and is provided for general information purposes in accordance with regulatory requirements.

Clients are advised that all investment strategies and the investments made as a result of implementing such investment strategies involve risk of loss and Clients should be prepared to bear the loss of asset investment and, in certain cases, beyond the amount of the investment. The investment performance and the success of any investment strategy or particular investment can never be predicted or guaranteed, and the value of a Client's investments fluctuates due to market conditions and other factors. The investment decisions made, and the actions taken by RHB, are subject to various market risks, as well as liquidity, currency, economic and political risks, and will not necessarily be profitable.
