Arcas Capital Management, LLC ("Adviser" or "Manager"), is a state registered investment adviser providing investment advisory services and specific strategies to individuals, pension and profit sharing plans, trusts, estates, charitable organizations, and/or small businesses (herein referred to as "Client" or "Clients").

The Manager serves as the investment manager for the Arcas Covered strategies (the "Strategy" or the "Strategies"). Arcas Covered is a short-biased investment strategy which has the potential to offer an efficient as well as profitable means of reducing an investor's risk to declines in the U.S. stock market while at the same time achieving a greater return than a bond investment in gradually rising markets.

Investment Management Services and Strategies

ALPHA Strategies

ALPHA 500 Strategy is an index strategy that enables an investor to gain exposure to the broad U.S. stock market (as measured by the S&P 500). The CBOE Index, since its inception in 1986, has had higher returns than the S&P 500 with lower volatility. As calculated by the CBOE, since 1999, this Index has a cumulative return of 59.6% versus a loss of 24.8% for the S&P 500. The ALPHA 500 is designed to outperform in quiet and falling markets, and underperform in months when stock prices rise sharply

The ALPHA Stock strategy combines the stock selection methodology of value, dividend growth and growth styles of investing

ALPHA World ETF Strategy is for investors looking for exposure to the best performing stock markets outside the U.S., the ALPHA World ETF offers broad diversification. Recognizing that relative strength always changes between markets, we use a World ETF Ranking model to identify the geographies that show the strongest momentum and potential for returns greater than its benchmark

Arcas Covered Strategies

Depending on the investor's needs, investment goals and overall objectives, the investor has the choice of different Arcas Covered strategies. The choice will depend on the amount of short exposure and manager discretion that the client wants.

ARCAS Covered 30/65 ("ACX")- Client selects the basic ARCAS Covered 30/65 strategy (ACX) which is designed to minimize volatility risk and is stress tested to remain profitable if the S&P declines 24% a quarter.

ARCAS Covered 50/100 ("AC2X")- Client selects the ARCAS Covered 50/100 (AC2X) strategy which is designed to maximize returns. The AC2X objective is, on a quarterly basis, in normal market conditions to initiate a short position in the S&P 500 with a notional value equal to 50% of the investment. This is designed to provide downside equity market protection. In addition, the strategy also employs an option strategy that seeks to exploit volatility fluctuations and mispricing in the S&P 500 index puts. This is the covered put position and will result in a short index put overlay. By overlaying the short index exposure

	with a basket of out-of-the-money index puts sold short, the overall portfolio's target short exposure is reduced and expected returns are increased by over 14.5% annually (net of fees and costs). On average in normal markets, on an annual basis with equal distribution of quarterly returns, the expected returns for AC2X will be up 6.5% if the S&amp;P 500 is up 16% for the year, up 24.5% if the S&amp;P 500 is down 16% and in an unchanged market will return over 14.5% per year (net of fees and costs). AC2X is designed to be a short-biased portfolio which maintains high expected returns in most negative equity markets, generates its best relative performance in flat equity markets, and still produces positive returns in a moderately rising market (up to an S&amp;P return of 25% per year or less assuming equally distributed quarterly returns of 6% or less). In bear market conditions, the strategy is allowed to initiate a short position equal to 100% of the investor's capital and reduce the amount of the short put overlay. In addition, the strategy seeks to reduce the "short" volatility nature of the put overlay by using VIX options Each Arcas Covered Strategy has its own performance characteristics. Options Trading and Positioning Strategies Option trading and positioning strategies are difficult to implement profitably due to a variety of factors relating to limited liquidity, wide bid-ask quotes, impediments to efficient trade execution and shifting price volatilities, among other things. Investment managers often turn to the options market to adjust their positions at times of illiquidity or market volatility. Rarely do managers closely follow option volumes and changes in volatility. The Manager closely follows the options market and has access to systems which provide advantages both in selecting the optimal option contracts for a specific investment strategy and in executing that strategy. These advantages can exist even in market conditions where many managers are attempting to simultaneously either buy or sell due to a news event or a specific directional price movement. Option pricing expertise is invaluable in these fast-market conditions when significant mispricing occurs. Access to automated executions can prove highly valuable as a means of entering or closing out positions at the most favorable prices. Institutional fund managers often reduce their long market exposure with the purchase of put options or sale of call options. While this can be done on the individual equity securities held by a fund, many fund managers view their fund as a basket that tracks one or more of the stock market indexes. Therefore, they use index options for hedging. Billions of dollars in equity portfolios regularly use this hedging strategy. The Manager believes that there are two reasons why such a strategy is not optimal for reducing market exposure or enhancing returns. Most fund managers have little experience with option valuation and volatility pricing models and lack expertise in executing option strategies. These fund managers rely on the derivative departments at large investment banks for ideas and executions. They often seek hedging protection at inopportune times when the cost of hedging is expensive (when volatility is the highest). The result can be an inappropriate or costly strategy which does not add meaningfully to returns and can increase risk. Investment Management Fees The Manager charges a quarterly management fee based on the net value of the account paid in advance at the beginning of each quarterly period. The annual management fee
