- Application and customization of the asset allocation strategy
- Quarterly Market Outlook & Strategy letter to clients

C. Tailored Services and Investment Restrictions

Paladin Advisors tailors its investment management based on an evolving analysis of clients' risk tolerance and investment objectives. If a client prefers, Paladin will incorporate assets managed elsewhere into the design of an overall investment strategy. At clients' request, Paladin will exclude investments in specific securities or types of securities. Our investment recommendations are not limited to any specific product or service offered by a broker dealer or insurance company.

D. Assets under Management

As of August 30 2018, Paladin Advisors had $223,738,632 in regulatory assets under management, of which $188,158,546 were discretionary. Paladin also had $56,629,250 in assets under our advisement, for total client assets under management of $280,367,882.

5. Fees and Compensation

Paladin offers an array of services, which may be secured individually or as a package tailored to the needs of each client:

A. Financial & Investment Plan Set-Up

Services can be contracted individually, or as a package: $5-10k depending on the complexity of the work

- Investment Portfolio Audit
- Financial & Retirement Plan
- Strategic Investment Plan & Dynamic Investment Strategy
- Portfolio Transition Strategy

B. Ongoing Investment Support (passive investment strategy)

0.5% of AUM, or minimum of $5k/year

- Quarterly portfolio reports, Market Outlook & Strategy letters
- Automated portfolio rebalancing
- Access to wide array of Fidelity & third-party funds
- Discounted trading & management fees on advisory platform
- Online financial & portfolio tools

C. Full-Service Investment Management includes all of the above, plus:

- Dynamic asset allocation strategy
- Opportunistic portfolio rebalancing
- Quarterly portfolio analysis & performance attribution
- Comprehensive annual review at clients' preferred location
- Ongoing phone and email consultation, as needed

Full-service investment management incurs an annual fee that is computed as a percentage of the assets under management, as follows:

- 1.0% for the first $2,500,000
- 0.8% for the next $2,500,000
- 0.6% for the next $5,000,000
- 0.4% for amounts over $10,000,000

There is a minimum $10,000 annual fee for full-service clients

D. Consulting on special projects

$300/hour; will quote project fee

- Business transitions
- Educational financing
- Tax & estate planning

The manner in which fees are charged is established in each client's written agreement. Paladin generally bills its investment service fees on a quarterly basis, in arrears. Clients may elect to be billed directly or to authorize Paladin to directly debit fees from their accounts. Management fees will not generally be prorated for any capital contributions or withdrawals made during the applicable calendar quarter. Accounts initiated or terminated during a calendar quarter will be charged a prorated fee. Upon termination of any account, any prepaid, unearned fees will be promptly refunded, and any earned, unpaid fees will be due and payable.

Paladin's advisory fees are separate and distinct from the fees and expenses charged by mutual funds and exchange-traded funds (described in each fund's prospectus), which generally include a management fee and other fund expenses. Further, there may be transaction charges associated with the purchase or sale of securities. Paladin does not share in any portion of the brokerage / transaction fees charged by the custodian that holds the client's funds. Indeed, Paladin seeks to minimize these costs to our clients by relying primarily on cost-effective, no-load, passively-structured investment vehicles. Neither Paladin, nor its employees, accepts any compensation for the sale of securities or other investment products, including asset-based sales charges or service fees from the sale of mutual funds.

Sub-advisory fees are based on the assets under management for which the client is seeking advice, and the scope of the advisory work. These fees are billed on a quarterly basis, in arrears.

Consulting and/or project fees are agreed with clients in advance, based on the scope of work. Fifty percent of the project fee is due upon commencement of the work.

Paladin may group certain related client accounts for the purposes of determining the overall account size and/or fee breakpoints. Certain client agreements may be governed by fee schedules different from those listed above, based on the duration of the relationship and/or or scope of work. These schedules are available upon request, but are not negotiable.

Account Termination and Refunds

Clients may terminate the advisory agreement by providing Paladin with a written notice. This notice requirement may be waived at the firm's discretion. If the client notifies their custodian that they are terminating the custodial account linked to a separately-managed account with Paladin, the firm will consider this to constitute a notice of termination. Upon termination of an account, any earned & unpaid fees will be due and payable.

Upon notice of termination, Paladin will have no obligation to recommend or take any actions with regard to the securities, cash or other investments in a terminated account but may, at the firm's discretion, assist the client in liquidating assets and in effecting the transfer of assets to a new custodian.

6. Performance-Based Fees and Side-By-Side Management

Paladin does not charge any performance-based fees (fees based on a share of a client's capital gains). However, should our clients' portfolios appreciate as a result of our investment strategy, Paladin will benefit. In this way, our interests are aligned with those of our clients.

7. Types of Clients

Paladin serves individuals and institutions seeking professional management of their investments, as well as wealth-management firms seeking to outsource some or all of their investment functions. All services derive from the firm's core focus on asset allocation, and all are provided on a fee-only basis. There are no account minimums, although we do charge a minimum annual fee of $10,000 for full-service clients.

8. Methods of Analysis, Investment Strategies and Risk of Loss

Investment management offers three potential sources of long-term return: gains from asset allocation, gains from market timing, and gains from security (or manager) selection. Of these three, asset allocation—the distribution of investment capital across broad market segments and fundamental risk factors—is the most important and reliable source of long-term return. Market timing and security selection may add value from time to time, but are subject to greater uncertainty and higher costs. Hence, at Paladin Advisors, we focus on achieving the optimal allocation of our clients' assets, reflecting their long-term investment goals and tolerance for market risk, as well as changing market conditions.

The foundational principles of our asset allocation process are diversification, value-based investing, and efficient execution. Diversification promotes greater stability and consistency of investment returns over time. Value investing improves the balance of reward vs. risk over the long run. Efficient execution minimizes the drag on returns from fees, trading costs, and taxes.

a. The importance of diversification

Asset classes have been conceived and defined to represent fundamental economic and market risk factors (i.e., equity risk, credit risk, interest rate risk, liquidity risk, currency risk, etc.). These risks vary over time, with the dynamics of the business cycle and markets. For example, equity risk is lowest when the economy is in an upswing, whereas interest rate risk is subdued when inflation is falling and/or growth is slowing. The premium that investors receive for bearing these risks (i.e., the excess return over risk-free US Treasury bills) thus also varies over time. To the extent that these underlying risk factors are distinct and, therefore, uncorrelated with one another, an asset allocation that is diversified across asset classes will exhibit less volatility than a portfolio that is relatively concentrated.

A principal focus of our asset allocation strategy is to understand these risk factors and the relationships among them, so that we can achieve well-diversified and stable portfolios for our clients. We draw upon a wide investment opportunity set, including stocks, bonds, real estate, and commodities. Within the equity portion of our clients' portfolios, we seek diversification across large and small capitalization stocks, value- and growth-oriented stocks, and U.S. and international stocks. For the fixed income portion of the portfolio, we utilize US government bonds, municipal bond funds & ladders, mortgage-backed securities, international and emerging market bonds, and (on an opportunistic basis) corporate and high-yield bonds.

Additionally, we include in clients' portfolios a diversified array of real assets. These are investments that historically have held their value in the face of rising inflation, and include inflation-protected bonds, real estate, energy and other commodities. These investments not only serve as an inflation hedge, they offer portfolio diversification.

Globally-oriented investing is another key source of diversification. The U.S. market represents only 40% of global market capitalization, and there are large and varied opportunities overseas. Our training and professional experience give us an advantage in identifying global investment opportunities and managing the associated risks.

We do not generally recommend that our clients invest in "alternative assets" such as private equity or hedge funds. These typically entail high fees, higher tax/transaction costs, and illiquidity. Small investors find it difficult to gain access to the minority of funds that have consistently demonstrated superior performance. The large majority of private equity and hedge funds have delivered lower returns over the last 20 years, net of fees and capital gains taxes, than comparable investments in the public markets.

b. The importance of value

Even well-diversified portfolios may experience large fluctuations, as the performance of (and relationships among) asset classes are unstable. Correlations tend to rise when equity markets are falling, leaving investors without the benefit of diversification when they need it most. Correlated declines occur when many markets become simultaneously overvalued—as occurred in the period leading up to the 2008-09 global financial crisis. In such circumstances, diversification may not be sufficient to protect an investment portfolio from severe losses.

For these reasons, we manage our clients' asset allocations dynamically, within a disciplined, value-oriented framework. We establish ranges around clients' long-term target allocations, within which we adjust exposures. We utilize valuation indicators to reduce clients' investments in market sectors that have become clearly overvalued, while increasing investments in those that are undervalued. This approach increases the likelihood that we are buying securities when prices are (relatively) low and selling when they are (relatively) high, thus improving portfolios' balance of reward vs. risk.

Although valuation is an important criterion guiding how our portfolios are invested, there are limits to which we will move our clients' allocations away from their long-term strategic targets. We believe that it is important to maintain well-diversified portfolios at all times, given the inherent uncertainty and volatility of markets. Moreover, since there are substantial tax and trading costs associated with allocation changes, we only adjust our clients' targets when the evidence of mis-valuation is clear and convincing.

As markets advance and decline, some assets in a portfolio perform better than others. Rebalancing involves selling (buying) assets that have appreciated (fallen) in value, in order to bring a portfolio's exposures back in line with targets. Intelligent rebalancing combines this value-oriented approach with a commitment to minimizing trading and tax costs. Deferring rebalancing decisions until a portfolio's exposures have moved materially (i.e. 10-20%) from target helps separate the 'signal' from the 'noise' in market movements, ensuring that the gains from rebalancing are sufficient to offset the cost. Value investing produces superior long-term returns, but requires discipline and consistency in the face of volatile markets. A value-oriented strategy may result in a client's having less exposure to a rapidly-rising market than he/she might wish, or more exposure to a poorly-performing sector that remains stubbornly out-of-favor. For this reason, our approach is best-suited for clients with a long investment horizon.

c. The importance of efficient execution

Management fees, trading costs and taxes can take an enormous toll on long-term investment returns. Therefore, we seek the most cost-effective execution of our clients' portfolio strategies. Ample research has demonstrated that capital markets are efficient, meaning that individual security prices generally reflect all publicly-available information. Indeed, financial markets are so competitive that few investors—even professional ones—routinely profit at the expense of others.

Rather than pay high fees for actively-managed funds, we rely principally on cost-effective passive investment vehicles (index- and exchange-traded funds, or ETFs) that are designed to track broad market sectors. While cost effective, passive vehicles will not predominantly alter their exposures based upon the market outlook. In less liquid asset classes (i.e., emerging market equity and debt, commodities) and in fixed-income sectors where there are multiple factor risks to be managed, we are more inclined to pay for active management. Modest allocations to actively-managed strategies are accommodated in core-satellite portfolio structures that remain cost-effective.

We are scrupulous about tax efficiency. Combined federal and state income tax rates now exceed 40% for many affluent families. They confront additional taxes on investment income, rising capital gains and dividend tax rates, and new limits on itemized deductions. Given the heavy tax penalty on investment returns, we seek to limit the realization of taxable gains and income to what is strictly necessary.

In addition to utilizing low-turnover, tax-efficient investment vehicles, we pay close attention to the distribution of investments across various taxable and tax-deferred accounts. Moreover, we rely on tax-loss harvesting techniques to neutralize realized capital gains whenever possible.

d. Sources of information

We undertake primary research to develop proprietary estimates of projected long-term returns, volatilities, and correlations across assets classes, as well as an array of valuation indicators, in order to construct our portfolio allocations. In developing this research, we rely on a wide variety of sources including general economic and market data, industry research, academic papers and data aggregation services (Bloomberg, Haver, etc.).

Paladin receives research from a variety of investment firms, including Dimensional Fund Advisors, Fidelity and other brokerage firms. The availability of these services is not contingent upon Paladin's committing to Fidelity any specific amount of trading business. Paladin does not receive any soft dollar benefits from Fidelity or other brokerage firms. Paladin does not, and would not, direct client transactions to a particular broker in return for client referrals or any other service or product.

e. Types of investments

We rely principally on cost-effective passive investment vehicles that are designed to track their respective market segment or asset class. These include equity and fixed-income mutual funds, as well as exchange-traded funds that meet our criteria for liquidity, cost, consistency, and tracking risk. In less liquid asset classes (i.e., emerging market equity and debt, and commodities) and in fixed-income sectors where there are multiple factor risks to be managed, we are more inclined to pay for active management. Modest allocations to actively-managed strategies can be accommodated in core-satellite portfolio structures that remain cost effective overall. We generally do not hold individual securities, unless these are legacy client positions, part of a municipal bond ladder, or part of our (passive) low-volatility income equity strategy.

9. Disciplinary Information

Registered investment advisers are required to disclose all material facts regarding any legal or disciplinary events that would be material to the evaluation of Paladin or the integrity of its management. There are no legal or disciplinary events pertaining to Paladin, its principals or employees, to report.

10. Other Financial Industry Activities and Affiliations

None of Paladin's management persons are registered, or have an application pending to register, as a broker-dealer or a registered representative of a broker-dealer. Further, none of Paladin's management persons are registered, or have an application pending to register, as a futures commission merchant, commodity pool operator, commodity trading advisor, or an associated person of the foregoing entities.

Paladin does not receive any compensation directly or indirectly from any investment funds or advisors we recommend or select for our clients, as detailed in paragraph 14 below.

11. Code of Ethics

Paladin has adopted a Code of Ethics for all supervised persons of the firm, describing its high standard of business conduct, and fiduciary duty to its clients. The Code of Ethics includes provisions protecting the confidentiality of client information, a prohibition on insider trading, a prohibition of rumor mongering, restrictions on the acceptance of significant gifts and the reporting of certain gifts and business entertainment items, and personal securities trading procedures, among other things. All supervised persons at Paladin must acknowledge annually, and continuously abide by, the terms of the Code of Ethics, or as amended.

Paladin anticipates that, in some circumstances, its principals and employees may wish to execute a personal transaction in the same security that is recommended to, or held by, a client of the firm. It is Paladin's policy that all such transactions first be executed on behalf of the firm's clients before any employee or management person may buy or sell the same security. Although it is unlikely that a principal or employee of Paladin could benefit from trading ahead of clients, since the firm relies principally on passive investment vehicles whose prices are set at the end of the trading day, we have established this rule to ensure clients' interests are always given priority.

Paladin's clients or prospective clients may request a copy of the firm's Code of Ethics by contacting Sean McMullen.

12. Brokerage Practices

Paladin relies primarily on its custodian, Fidelity Investments, for brokerage services. As such, for clients in need of brokerage or custodial services, the firm will typically recommend the use of Fidelity Investments, provided that such recommendation is consistent with meeting its fiduciary duty to clients. Paladin clients must evaluate this broker before opening an account. The factors considered by the firm when making this recommendation are the broker's ability to provide professional services, the firm's experience with the broker, the broker's reputation, and the broker's quality and cost of execution, and the custodial platform afforded to clients, among other factors. However, with the exception of individual bonds, Paladin does not survey or shop the brokerage market place for best execution on a transaction-by-transaction basis. As such, clients may direct the firm to an alternative broker-dealer to be used. Generally, this direction is given via the client's selection of a particular custodian and/or specific platform via the custodian's account application. In directing the use of a particular broker or dealer, it should be understood that Paladin will not have authority to negotiate commissions among various brokers or obtain volume discounts, and best execution may not be achieved. In addition, a disparity in commission charges may exist between the commissions charged to the client and those charged to other clients.

As part of Paladin's agreement with Fidelity, Paladin receives the following at no charge:

- Client account information online
- Online trade execution at preferential rates
- Voice brokerage for securities that cannot be traded online
- Real-time pricing for equities and ETFs
- Closing security prices for mutual funds
- Practice management and compliance updates
- Economic and market research
- An array of financial planning and investment management tools

The availability of these services is not contingent upon Paladin's committing to Fidelity any specific amount of trading business. Paladin does not receive any soft dollar benefits from Fidelity or other brokerage firms. Paladin does not, and would not, direct client transactions to a particular broker in return for client referrals or any other service or product.

We also utilize the prime brokerage services of Advisors Asset Management (AAM) for our municipal bond ladders, Parametric Portfolio Associates (Parametric) for execution of our proprietary income equity strategy, and Van Hulzen Asset Management (Van Hulzen) for the execution of their covered call strategy.

With the exception of some municipal bond purchases handled by AAM, Parametric's execution of our income equity strategy, and Van Hulzen's execution of their covered call strategy, Paladin does not generally aggregate the trades of its clients. All trade decisions are determined and executed individually, given the customization of client portfolios. Additionally, taxable (individual) client transactions are assessed in terms of their tax efficiency, which requires individual analysis of most trading decisions. As a result, our clients do not receive the benefits of reduced transaction fees that such aggregation of trades could provide to them. However, Paladin clients receive the benefit of tailored and tax-efficient portfolio management.

If a client, when undertaking an advisory relationship with Paladin, already has a pre-established relationship with a broker and instructs the firm to execute all transactions through that broker, it should be understood that under those circumstances, the firm will not have the authority to negotiate commissions, obtain volume discounts and best execution may not be achieved. In addition, under these circumstances a disparity in commission charges may exist between the commissions charged to other clients since the firm may not be able to aggregate orders to reduce transaction costs or the client may receive less favorable prices.

Paladin reserves the right to decline acceptance of any client account for which the client directs the use of a broker if the firm believes that this choice would hinder its fiduciary duty to the client and/or its ability to service the account.

13. Review of Accounts

The Chief Executive and Investment Advisors at Paladin review each of the client's accounts weekly, to assess whether the portfolio is in line with its target asset allocation. When allocations differ materially from target (i.e., a deviation greater than +/-20%) the portfolio is rebalanced. When markets are turbulent, client allocations are reviewed more frequently, to protect portfolios from losses or take advantage of extraordinary opportunities that may arise.

All clients receive consolidated quarterly performance reports to supplement their monthly account statements and trade confirmations from the firm's custodian, Fidelity Investments.

Paladin statements may vary from those provided by our custodian as a result of different accounting procedures, reporting dates, or valuation methodologies of certain securities. These performance reports are accompanied by a cover letter that explains and interprets each client's portfolio results in the context of our governing investment strategy. Clients also receive our quarterly Market Outlook and Strategy letter, which discusses market developments and their implications for our strategies.

14. Client Referrals and Other Compensation

Neither Paladin nor its employees receives or pays referral fees from any advisors that we recommend, or by whom we are recommended.

15. Custody

Custody is defined as any legal or actual ability by the firm to access client funds or securities. All client funds and securities are held with one or more "qualified custodians." However, although Paladin does not take actual possession of client funds or securities, the firm is deemed to have constructive custody of certain client accounts and funds under current SEC interpretation and guidance. Therefore, Paladin urges all of its clients to carefully review and compare the reports of account holdings and/or performance results they receive from Paladin to those they receive from their qualified custodian. Any discrepancies should be reported to Paladin and/or the qualified custodian immediately.

16. Investment Discretion

Clients of Paladin's services typically grant the firm discretion over investment decisions (i.e., the type and amount of securities to be bought and sold) on their behalf. Any limitations on the firm's discretion are spelled out in clients' Investment Policy Statements (IPS). In all cases, discretion is exercised in a manner that is consistent with the objectives outlined in the IPS. Paladin may not deduct funds or securities from client accounts, except for the payment of advisory fees, as detailed above.

Clients of Paladin's research and sub-advisory clients bear sole responsibility for the application and customization of any investment advice they receive from Paladin. They may adapt or disregard the firm's investment recommendations, as they deem appropriate.

17. Voting Client Securities

Paladin does not vote proxies for clients. Clients receive proxy statements from their custodial firm, Fidelity Investments, and are welcome to contact us with questions about a particular issue. Parametric executes proxy votes on behalf of Paladin clients for the securities held in our income equity strategy.

18. Financial Information

Under no circumstances will Paladin earn fees in advance of services rendered, and therefore Paladin has no obligation to disclose its firm financials as part of this Brochure. Paladin has no financial condition that impairs its ability to meet our contractual obligations to its clients, and have never been the subject of a bankruptcy proceeding.
