ITEM 7: TYPES OF CLIENTS

Jon D. Rock provides financial planning software services to individuals and high – net worth clients. There is no minimum account size or investment minimum.

ITEM 8: METHODS OF ANALYSIS, INVESTMENT STRATEGIES AND RISK OF LOSS

1. METHODS OF ANALYSIS

In formulating financial planning advice, Jon D. Rock software analyzes the client's financial information, risk profile, goals and objectives. On the back – end algorithms forecast the future economic environment utilizing historical asset class rates of return, statistical relationships and economic data. This in turn feeds into financial planning ratios to guide an optimized asset allocation and model suitable asset classes for particular investment portfolios. Asset classes include, but are not limited to publicly traded REITS, ETFs and MLPs.

2. INVESTMENT STRATEGIES

The primary investment strategy behind Jon D. Rock's software is modeled according to varying economic theories including the Efficient Market Hypothesis, Modern Portfolio Theory and Behavioral Finance. User – driven factors, such as goal – based roadmaps, investment time horizon, desired rate of return and risk aversion assist in driving the software generated advice across different asset classes and investment styles.

Investment strategies are based on interactive online questionnaires that gather information about tax filing stat, yearly income, monthly living expenses and detailed questions about investment objectives, knowledge level, risk profile and time frame. These questions include:

- What is your primary investment objective today?
- Which of the following reflects your current knowledge of investments?
- How much would your portfolio have to decline in ONE year in order for you to consider selling your investments?
- How soon do you expect to need the money you are investing?
- How do you expect a financial planner to be most helpful to you in the near-term?

3. RISK OF LOSS

Financial planning and investing involve significant risks of loss, and all investments have underlying risks that are non – diversifiable.

Some risks of loss that Jon D. Rock users should be aware of include, but are not limited to:

1. Currency/Exchange Rate Risk: Dollar value fluctuations against the currency of the investment's originating country.
2. Market Risk: Cannot be eliminated through diversification. Possibility that an investment experiences loss due to circumstances that affect the overall performance of investments in the financial markets.
3. Inflation Risk: Decline in purchasing power due to inflation undermining an investment's return.
4. Interest – Rate Risk: Risk of investment losses resulting from a change in interest rates.
5. Political and Legislative Risk: Risk that investment returns could suffer as a result of political changes or instability in a country.
6. Reinvestment Risk: Probability that cash generated from fixed income flows, such as coupon payments, will not be reinvested at a rate equal to their current rate of return.
7. Business Risk: Possibility that an enterprise will not generate the expected profits due to a change in consumer tastes, preferences, strikes, increased competition, government policy and/or any, and all, other uncertainties.
8. Financial Risk: Possibility that an enterprise won't be able to meet its financial obligations.
9. Liquidity Risk: The inability of an enterprise to meet its short - term financial obligations.
