Paladin charges a $10,000 minimum annual fee for full-service clients, and $1,000 for Partners

D. Consulting on special projects

$250/hour; will quote project fee

The manner in which fees are invoiced and paid is established in each client's Investment Services Agreement. Paladin generally invoices advisory fees on a quarterly basis, in arrears. Clients may elect to be billed directly or to authorize Paladin to directly debit fees from their brokerage account(s). Accounts that are initiated or terminated during a calendar quarter will be charged a prorated fee. Advisory fees will not generally be prorated for any capital contributions or withdrawals made during the applicable calendar quarter.

An estimate for financial and investment planning services under Option A (Financial & Investment Plan Set-Up) will be provided prior to the commencement of work. If a client chooses to proceed with full-service wealth management under Option C, any payments for up-front work will be credited towards future advisory fees.

Paladin's advisory fees are separate and distinct from the fees and expenses charged by mutual funds, exchange-traded funds (described in each fund's prospectus), and separate account managers, which generally include a management fee and other fund expenses. Further, there may be transaction charges associated with the purchase or sale of securities. Paladin does not share in any portion of the brokerage / transaction fees charged by the custodian that holds the client's funds. Indeed, Paladin seeks to minimize these costs to our clients by relying primarily on cost-effective, no-load, passively-structured investment vehicles. Neither Paladin, nor its employees, accepts any compensation for the sale of securities or other investment products, including asset-based sales charges or service fees from the sale of mutual funds.

Sub-advisory fees are based on the assets under management for which the client is seeking advice, and the scope of the advisory work. These fees are billed on a quarterly basis, in arrears. Consulting and/or project fees are agreed with clients in advance, based on the scope of work.

Paladin groups client accounts that belong to an extended family for the purposes of determining overall portfolio size and fee breakpoints. Longstanding clients enjoy a waiver of the first fee breakpoint. Where assets under advisement represent a significant share of a client's portfolio, we may charge a lower fee on the entirety of the clients AUM/AUA. These schedules are available upon request.

Either party may terminate the advisory agreement at any time by providing each other written notice. This notice requirement may be waived at the firm's discretion. If the client notifies their custodian that they are terminating the custodial account linked to a separately-managed account with Paladin, the firm will consider this a notice of termination. Upon termination of an account, any earned & unpaid fees will be due and payable.

Upon notice of termination, Paladin will have no obligation to recommend or take any actions with regard to the securities, cash or other investments in a terminated account but may, at the firm's discretion, assist the client in liquidating assets and in effecting the transfer of assets to a new custodian.

6. Performance-Based Fees and Side-By-Side Management

Paladin does not charge any performance-based fees (fees based on a share of a client's capital gains). However, should our clients' portfolios appreciate as a result of our investment strategy, Paladin will benefit. In this way, our interests are aligned with those of our clients.

7. Types of Clients

Paladin serves individual and institutional (non-profit) clients that seek professional management of their investments, within a holistic planning framework. Our services are also available to other wealth-management firms seeking to outsource some or all of their investment functions. All services derive from the firm's focus on strategic planning and dynamic asset allocation, and all are provided on a fee-only basis. We receive no compensation apart from the advisory fees paid by our clients.

a. Full-Service Clients

Clients that are in or approaching retirement, as well as those with complex planning and investment needs, typically select our full-service option (C), to which we apply a minimum annual fee of $10,000. In order to meet our fiduciary duty to clients, Paladin directs clients with fewer assets to our lower-cost Paladin Partners offering.

b. Paladin Partners

Paladin Partners is the default service model for clients with assets of less than $1,000,000. While there is no asset minimum, a minimum annual fee of $1,000 will be charged. To keep costs low, Paladin Partners assets are held at TD Ameritrade, one of the firm's two custodians. These portfolios are managed dynamically and rebalanced through a model-based process. Communications are streamlined, with a focus on the annual financial plan update and investment portfolio review.

c. Institutional (Non-Profit) Clients

Institutional clients typically do not require extensive planning services or tax considerations in investment management decisions. Paladin Advisors is proud to support non-profit organizations with a discounted flat fee of 0.5% for our full-service offering, with a minimum annual fee of $5,000.

8. Methods of Analysis, Investment Strategies and Risk of Loss

Investment management offers three potential sources of long-term return: asset allocation, market timing, and security (or manager) selection. Of these three, asset allocation—the distribution of investment capital across broad market segments and fundamental risk factors—is the most important and reliable source of long-term return. Market timing and security selection may add value from time to time, but are subject to greater uncertainty and higher costs. Hence, at Paladin Advisors, we focus on achieving the optimal allocation of our clients' assets, reflecting their long-term investment goals and tolerance for market risk, as well as changing market conditions.

The foundational principles of our asset allocation process are diversification, value-based investing, and efficient execution. Diversification promotes greater stability and consistency of investment returns over time. Value investing improves the balance of reward vs. risk over the long run. Efficient execution minimizes the drag on returns from fees, trading costs, and taxes.

a. The importance of diversification

Asset classes have been defined to represent fundamental economic and market risk factors (i.e., equity, credit, interest rate, liquidity, and currency risk). These risks vary over time, with the dynamics of the business cycle and markets. For example, equity risk is lowest when the economy is in an upswing, whereas interest rate risk is subdued when inflation is falling and/or growth is slowing. The premium that investors receive for bearing these risks (i.e., the excess return over risk-free US Treasury bills) thus also varies over time. To the extent that these underlying risk factors are distinct and, therefore, uncorrelated with one another, an asset allocation that is diversified across asset classes will exhibit less volatility than a portfolio that is relatively concentrated.

A principal focus of our asset allocation strategy is to understand these risk factors and the relationships among them, so that we can achieve well-diversified and stable portfolios for our clients. We draw upon a wide investment opportunity set, including stocks, bonds, real estate, and commodities. Within the equity portion of our clients' portfolios, we seek diversification across large and small capitalization stocks, value- and growth-oriented stocks, and U.S. and international stocks. For the fixed income portion of the portfolio, we utilize US government bonds, municipal bond funds & ladders, mortgage-backed securities, international and emerging market bonds, and (on an opportunistic basis) corporate and high-yield bonds.

Additionally, we include in clients' portfolios a diversified array of real assets. These are investments that historically have held their value in the face of rising inflation, and include inflation-protected bonds, real estate, energy and other commodities. These investments not only serve as an inflation hedge, they offer portfolio diversification.

Globally-oriented investing is another key source of diversification. The U.S. market represents only 40% of global market capitalization, and there are large and varied opportunities overseas. Our training and professional experience give us an advantage in identifying global investment opportunities and managing the associated risks.

We do not generally recommend that our clients invest in "alternative assets" such as private equity or hedge funds. These typically entail high fees, higher tax/transaction costs, and illiquidity. Small investors find it difficult to gain access to the minority of funds that have consistently demonstrated superior performance. The large majority of private equity and hedge funds have delivered lower returns over the last 20 years, net of fees and capital gains taxes, than comparable investments in the public markets.

b. The importance of value

Even well-diversified portfolios may experience large fluctuations, as the performance of (and relationships among) asset classes are unstable. Correlations tend to rise when equity markets are falling, leaving investors without the benefit of diversification when they need it most. Correlated declines occur when many markets become simultaneously overvalued—as occurred in the period leading up to the 2008-09 global financial crisis. In such circumstances, diversification may not be sufficient to protect an investment portfolio from severe losses.

For these reasons, we manage our clients' asset allocations dynamically, within a disciplined, value-oriented framework. We establish ranges around clients' long-term target allocations, within which we adjust exposures. We utilize valuation indicators to reduce clients' investments in market sectors that have become clearly overvalued, while increasing investments in those that are undervalued. This approach increases the likelihood that we are buying securities when prices are (relatively) low and selling when they are (relatively) high, thus improving portfolios' balance of reward vs. risk.

Although valuation is an important criterion guiding how our portfolios are invested, there are limits to which we will move our clients' allocations away from their long-term strategic targets. We believe that it is important to maintain well-diversified portfolios at all times, given the inherent uncertainty and volatility of markets. Moreover, since there are substantial tax and trading costs associated with allocation changes, we only adjust our clients' targets when the evidence of mis-valuation is clear and convincing.

As markets advance and decline, some assets in a portfolio perform better than others. Rebalancing involves selling (buying) assets that have appreciated (fallen) in value, in order to bring a portfolio's exposures back in line with targets. Intelligent rebalancing combines this value-oriented approach with a commitment to minimizing trading and tax costs. Deferring rebalancing decisions until a portfolio's exposures have moved materially (i.e. 10-20%) from target helps separate the 'signal' from the 'noise' in market movements, ensuring that the gains from rebalancing are sufficient to offset the cost.

Value investing typically produces higher compound returns over the long-term, but requires discipline and consistency in the face of volatile markets. A value-oriented strategy may result in a client's having less exposure to a rapidly-rising market than he/she might wish, or more exposure to a poorly-performing sector that remains stubbornly out-of-favor. For this reason, our approach is best-suited for clients with a long investment horizon. Over short- to medium-term horizons, growth-oriented investments may significantly outperform value, a risk clients must be willing to bear.

c. The importance of efficient execution

Management fees, trading costs and taxes can take an enormous toll on long-term investment returns. Therefore, we seek the most cost-effective execution of our clients' portfolio strategies. Ample research has demonstrated that capital markets are efficient, meaning that individual security prices generally reflect all publicly-available information.

Indeed, financial markets are so competitive that few investors—even professional ones—routinely profit at the expense of others.

Rather than pay high fees for actively-managed funds, we rely principally on cost-effective passive investment vehicles (index- and exchange-traded funds, or ETFs) that are designed to track broad market sectors. While cost effective, passive vehicles will not predominantly alter their exposures based upon the market outlook. In less liquid asset classes (i.e., emerging market equity and debt, commodities) and in fixed-income sectors where there are multiple factor risks to be managed, we are more inclined to pay for active management. Modest allocations to actively-managed strategies are accommodated in core-satellite portfolio structures that remain cost-effective.

We are scrupulous about tax efficiency. Combined federal and state income tax rates now exceed 40% for many affluent families. They confront additional taxes on investment income, rising capital gains and dividend tax rates, and new limits on itemized deductions. Given the heavy tax penalty on investment returns, we seek to limit the realization of taxable gains and income to what is strictly necessary.

In addition to utilizing low-turnover, tax-efficient investment vehicles, we pay close attention to the distribution of investments across various taxable and tax-deferred accounts. Moreover, we rely on tax-loss harvesting techniques to neutralize realized capital gains whenever possible.

All investments bear risk of loss, over the short- or long-term. These include systematic market risk, security-selection, foreign currency risk and illiquidity risk. Paladin's investment approach is geared toward limiting losses through control of portfolio drawdowns; our objective is to maximize returns on a risk-adjusted basis.

d. Sources of information

We undertake primary research to develop estimates of projected long-term returns, volatilities, and correlations across assets classes. We rely on an array of valuation and cyclical indicators in order to construct our strategic and dynamic portfolio allocation targets. In developing this research, we rely on a wide variety of sources including economic and market data, industry research, academic papers and data aggregation services.

Paladin receives research from a variety of investment firms, including Dimensional Fund Advisors, Fidelity, TD Ameritrade, and other brokerage firms. The availability of these services is not contingent upon Paladin's committing any specific amount of trading business to the various brokerage firms. Paladin does not receive any soft dollar benefits from TD Ameritrade, Fidelity, or other brokerage firms. Paladin does not, and would not, direct client transactions to a particular broker in return for client referrals or any other service or product.

e. Types of investments

We rely principally on cost-effective passive investment vehicles that are designed to track their respective market segment or asset class. These include equity and fixed-income mutual funds, as well as exchange-traded funds that meet our criteria for liquidity, cost, consistency, and tracking risk. In less liquid asset classes (i.e., emerging market equity and debt, and commodities) and in fixed-income sectors where there are multiple factor risks to be managed, we are more inclined to pay for active management. Modest allocations to actively-managed strategies can be accommodated in core-satellite portfolio structures that remain cost effective overall. We generally do not hold individual securities, unless these are legacy client positions, part of a municipal bond ladder, or held in a separately-managed account (see Section 12 below).

9. Disciplinary Information

Registered investment advisers are required to disclose all material facts regarding any legal or disciplinary events that would be material to the evaluation of Paladin or the integrity of its management. There are no legal or disciplinary events pertaining to Paladin, its principals or employees, to report.

10. Other Financial Industry Activities and Affiliations

None of Paladin's management persons are registered, or have an application pending to register, as a broker-dealer or a registered representative of a broker-dealer. Further, none of Paladin's management persons are registered, or have an application pending to register, as a futures commission merchant, commodity pool operator, commodity trading advisor, or an associated person of the foregoing entities.

Paladin does not receive any compensation directly or indirectly from any investment funds or advisors we recommend or select for our clients, as detailed in paragraph 14 below.

11. Code of Ethics

Paladin has adopted a Code of Ethics for all supervised persons of the firm, describing its high standard of business conduct, and fiduciary duty to its clients. The Code of Ethics includes provisions protecting the confidentiality of client information, prohibitions on insider trading and rumor mongering, restrictions on the acceptance of significant gifts and the reporting of certain gifts and business entertainment items, and personal securities trading procedures, among other things. All supervised persons at Paladin must acknowledge annually, and continuously abide by, the terms of the Code of Ethics.

Paladin anticipates that its principals and employees may wish to execute a personal transaction in the same security(ies) recommended to, or held by, clients of the firm. We adhere to the principle that our team should have "skin in the game" with regard to the strategies we execute on behalf of our clients. It is Paladin's policy that all such transactions first be executed in client accounts, before any employee or management person may buy or sell the same security. Although it is unlikely that a principal or employee of Paladin could benefit from trading ahead of clients, since the firm relies principally on passive investment vehicles whose prices are set at the end of the trading day, we have established this rule to ensure clients' interests are always given priority.

Paladin's clients or prospective clients may request a copy of the firm's Code of Ethics by contacting Sean McMullen.

12. Brokerage Practices

Paladin relies primarily on two custodians, TD Ameritrade and Fidelity Investments, for brokerage services. The firm will typically recommend the use of one or both of these firms, provided that such recommendation is consistent with meeting its fiduciary duty to clients. Paladin Partners assets are custodied and traded at TD Ameritrade, which offers discounted commissions and cost-effective portfolio rebalancing tools.

The factors considered in selecting these custodians are the firms' ability to provide professional services, their reputation, the quality and cost of trade execution, and the quality of the online platform afforded to clients, among other factors. However, with the exception of individual bonds, Paladin does not survey or shop the brokerage marketplace for best execution on a transaction-by-transaction basis.

As part of our agreements with TD Ameritrade and Fidelity, Paladin and its clients receive the following at no extra charge:

- Client account information online
- Online trade execution at preferential rates
- Capital gains analysis, tax reporting statements & portfolio rebalancing tools
- Voice brokerage for securities that cannot be traded online
- Real-time pricing for equities and ETFs
- Closing security prices for mutual funds
- Practice management and compliance updates
- Economic and market research
- An array of financial planning tools

The availability of these services is not contingent upon Paladin's committing any specific amount of trading business to either broker. Paladin does not receive any soft dollar benefits from TD, Fidelity, or other brokerage firms. Paladin does not, and would not, direct client transactions to a particular broker in return for client referrals or any other service or product.

We also utilize the prime brokerage services of Advisors Asset Management (AAM) for our municipal bond ladders, Parametric Portfolio Associates (Parametric) for execution of our proprietary investment strategies, and Van Hulzen Asset Management (Van Hulzen) for the execution of their covered call strategy.

Most trading decisions for Paladin's full-service private and institutional clients are executed individually, given the high degree of customization of client portfolios. Additionally, private client transactions are assessed in terms of their tax efficiency, which requires individual analysis of most trading decisions. As a result, our clients may not receive the benefits of reduced transaction fees that such aggregation of trades could provide to them. However, Paladin clients do receive the benefit of tailored and tax-efficient portfolio management.

Paladin Partners portfolios are executed and allocated through a model-based block-trading approach that is scaled to meet the investment objectives of each client. As a result, Paladin Partners may receive better execution, but do not benefit from portfolio customization.

When client trades in the same security are bunched in a single ("block") order, Paladin will attempt to fill client orders by day-end. If the block order is not filled by day-end, the Chief Investment Officer will allocate shares executed to underlying accounts on a pro rata basis, adjusted as necessary to keep client transaction costs to a minimum and in accordance with specific account guidelines. If a block order is filled (full or partial fill) at several prices through multiple trades, an average price and commission will be used for all trades executed. All participants receiving securities from the block trade will receive the same average price, and only trades executed within the block on a single day may be combined for the purposes of calculating the average price.

In directing the use of a particular broker or dealer for all or a portion of the trades executed in client accounts, it should be understood that, with respect to such trades, Paladin will not have authority to negotiate commissions among various broker dealers on a trade-by-trade basis. We may not be able to obtain volume discounts, so best execution may not be achieved. In addition, a disparity in commission charges may exist between the commissions charged to the client for such trades and those charged to other clients. That said, trading commissions are at present low and fairly uniform, so the difference in cost between individual client and block trades are de minimis.

Paladin reserves the right to decline acceptance of any client account for which the client directs the use of a broker if the firm believes that this choice would hinder its fiduciary duty to the client and/or its ability to service the account.

13. Review of Accounts

Paladin's Chief Investment Officer, Chief Compliance Officer and Investment Advisors review client portfolios on a bi-weekly basis, to assess whether they are in line with target asset allocations. When allocations differ materially from target (i.e., a deviation greater than +/-20%) the portfolio is rebalanced. When markets are turbulent, client allocations are reviewed more frequently, to protect portfolios from losses or take advantage of extraordinary opportunities that may arise.

All clients receive consolidated quarterly performance reports to supplement their monthly account statements and trade confirmations from the firm's custodians, Fidelity Investments and TD Ameritrade.

Paladin statements may vary from those provided by our custodians as a result of different accounting procedures, reporting dates, or valuation methodologies of certain securities. These performance reports are accompanied by a cover letter that explains and interprets each client's portfolio results in the context of our governing investment strategy. Clients also receive our quarterly Market Outlook and Strategy letter, which discusses market developments and their implications for our strategies.

14. Client Referrals and Other Compensation

Neither Paladin nor its employees receives or pays referral fees from any advisors that we recommend, or by whom we are recommended.

15. Custody

Custody is defined as any legal or actual ability by the firm to access client funds or securities. All client funds and securities are held with one or more “qualified custodians.” However, although Paladin does not take actual possession of client funds or securities, the firm is deemed to have constructive custody of certain client accounts, since we directly debit our fees from client accounts. Paladin urges all of its clients to carefully review and compare the reports of account holdings and/or performance results they receive from Paladin to those they receive from their qualified custodian(s). Any discrepancies should be reported to Paladin and/or the qualified custodian immediately.

16. Investment Discretion

Clients of Paladin’s services typically grant the firm discretion over investment decisions (i.e., the type and amount of securities to be bought and sold) on their behalf. Any limitations on the firm’s discretion are spelled out in clients’ Investment Policy Statements (IPS). In all cases, discretion is exercised in a manner that is consistent with the objectives outlined in the IPS. Paladin may not deduct funds or securities from client accounts, except for the payment of advisory fees, as detailed above.

Recipients of Paladin’s research bear sole responsibility for the application and customization of any investment advice they receive from Paladin. They may adapt or disregard the firm’s investment recommendations, as they deem appropriate.

17. Voting Client Securities

Paladin does not vote proxies for clients. Clients receive proxy statements from their custodial firm(s), TD Ameritrade and/or Fidelity Investments, and are welcome to contact us with questions about a particular issue. Paladin does not ask their separate account managers to vote proxies on behalf of its clients.

18. Financial Information

Under no circumstances does Paladin earn fees in advance of services rendered, and therefore Paladin has no obligation to disclose its firm financials as part of this Brochure. Paladin has no financial condition that impairs its ability to meet our contractual obligations to its clients, and has never been the subject of a bankruptcy proceeding.

Certifications

* CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™ (CFP®) - The CFP® certification is a voluntary certification; no federal or state law or regulation requires financial planners to hold CFP® certification. It is recognized in the United States and a number of other countries for its (1) high standard of professional education; (2) stringent code of conduct and standards of practice; and (3) ethical requirements that govern professional engagements with clients.

To attain the right to use the CFP® marks, an individual must satisfactorily fulfill the following requirements:

- Education – Complete an advanced college-level course of study addressing the financial planning subject areas that CFP Board's studies have determined as necessary for the competent and professional delivery of financial planning services, and attain a Bachelor's Degree from a regionally accredited United States college or university (or its equivalent from a foreign university);
- Examination – Pass the comprehensive CFP® Certification Examination;
- Experience – Complete at least three years of full-time financial planning-related experience (or the equivalent, measured as 2,000 hours per year); and
- Ethics – Agree to be bound by CFP Board's Standards of Professional Conduct, a set of documents outlining the ethical and practice standards for CFP® professionals.

Individuals who become certified must complete 30 hours of continuing education hours every two years, including two hours on the Code of Ethics and other parts of the Standards of Professional Conduct, to maintain competence and keep up with developments in the financial planning field; and renew an agreement to be bound by the Standards of Professional Conduct. The Standards prominently require that CFP® professionals provide financial planning services at a fiduciary standard of care. This means CFP® professionals must provide financial planning services in the best interests of their clients.

CFP® professionals who fail to comply with the above standards and requirements may be subject to CFP Board's enforcement process, which could result in suspension or permanent revocation of their CFP® certification.

**Chartered Financial Analyst® (CFA) - To earn a CFA charter, you must have four years of qualified investment work experience, become a member of the CFA Institute, pledge to adhere to the CFA Institute Code of Ethics and Standards of Professional Conduct on an annual basis, apply for membership to a local CFA member society, and complete the CFA Program. The CFA Program is organized into three levels, each culminating in a six-hour exam. Level I is offered in June or December and Level II and III are administered in June. In passing these exams, candidates demonstrate their competence, integrity and extensive knowledge in accounting, ethical and professional standards, economics, portfolio management and security analysis.
